Connelly Dies Unexpectedly of Food Poisoning

Massachusetts Legislator Ill 22 Hrs.; Wife and Brothers Notified.

Capital Stunned; House to Adjourn

Priest Attends Bedside of Labor Champion at D. C. Hospital.

By Sidney Olson.

Representative William P. Connelly, Jr. (Democrat), of Massachusetts, died unexpectedly last night, death attributed to food poisoning, complicated by a heart condition, came at 8:10 p. m. in Homeopathic Hospital, 22 hours after he became ill.

The small, bald, energetic chairman of the House Labor Committee, who would have been 49 years old August 24, died before realizing the greatest dream of his life—passage by Congress of minimum-wage and maximum-hour labor legislation.

Co-author of the Wagner-Connelly labor relations act, he recently had written his hopes "for the emancipation of labor" into the Black-Connelly wage-hour bill, now the subject of intense controversy in hearings before the joint Congressional labor committee.

Wife Is Notified.

Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), of New Jersey, said last night at Jersey City, N. J., the Associated Press said, "I was too shocked" by Connelly's death to "decide now whether to accept the Labor Committee chairmanship as his successor." She is entitled to succeed to the position, but may not desire to relinquish her present chairmanship of the District Committee of the Labor Committee.

Mrs. Connelly was notified of her husband's death just as she was about to board an airplane at East Hartford, Conn., for Washington, the Associated Press said. She turned back to Lynn when State police halted an automobile in which she was traveling with two of her husband's brothers and a sister-in-law, to await arrival of the body there.

The Rev. Hugh A. Dalton, of St. Aloysius church, administered the last rites of the deceased to Connelly, who, in terrible agony, was conscious to the end.

Death of the doughty little Irishman from Massachusetts, one of the most popular men in Congress, came as a stunning shock to his colleagues.

Speaker Bankhead, stating that the death was "the greatest shock in many years," indicated the House will adjourn today in tribute to Connelly, who, in terrible agony, was conscious to the end.

Rule Sought To Bring Up R. C. Tax Bill

Consideration Tomorrow Asked; Income Levy Exemptions Win.

Commissioners Agree to Raise Percentage on Real Estate.

By James D. Secrest.

Armed with an amendment exempting members of Congress and other elective or appointive Federal officials from a District income tax, the House District Committee today will ask for a special rule to bring up the omnibus tax bill tomorrow in the House.

Meeting in special session after an ultimatum had been issued by House leaders, the committee voted to retain the income levy as a part of the bill but to restrict its application to local residents.

Earlier, under pressure of House leaders, members of the Kennedy sub-committee obtained a tentative agreement from the District Commissioners to raise the realty tax 20 cents to $1.70 if the income levy were struck from the bill.

President Roosevelt, meanwhile, informally endorsed the District income tax, although he intimated disapproval of other proposals.

Disapproved at a press conference, the President said that some of the "wildest ideas" he had ever heard had been suggested as taxes on District residents. He did not state, however, that any of them are incorporated in the omnibus bill now before the House.

Disapproves Sales Tax.

The President said he had become dizzy a month ago reading about District taxes after being asked what he thought of the efforts of House members to make a "hole" in the District tax bill for themselves.

The President also stated that he approved the inheritance tax and disapproved the sales tax as a national levy. He expressed the view that Government employees should be taxed on the same basis as other citizens.

Another attack on the amended omnibus tax bill is expected today from members of the Rules Committee, who will demand that the bill be applied to Federal employees who hold permanent jobs.

Representative Howard Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, who started the House revolt against the bill Monday, has warned the District Committee that he will oppose it until his constituents are exempted from the income tax provisions.

Amendments to force a hike in the realty tax have been threatened, and doubtless will materialize on the floor.

The District Committee authorized Chairman Kennedy and other members of the sub-committee to ask the Rules Committee for a special rule limiting debate on the bill to two hours, but leaving it open to amendment on this rule.

Should this rule be allowed, there is still a chance that the measure may become a law before the end of the fiscal year. Such an achievement, however, would necessitate

Third Is Killed By Spotted Fever In D. C., Vicinity

Rocky Mountain spotted fever claimed another victim here late yesterday—Mrs. Augusta Margaret Stuermann, 40, of 609 Jefferson street northwest.

Here was the third death from the strange malady in this area within eight days.

With her husband, Leonard H. Stuermann, she took a trip to the northern neck of Virginia on Memorial Day. Mr. Stuermann, 40, called last night that, at the place they visited, he and his wife had to walk through a box hedge.

"The tick may have come from that," he said, "or it may have got into our parked automobile in some way." Mr. Stuermann said his wife began to feel ill about three days after the trip.

Funeral services for Mrs. Stuermann will be held Friday at 2 p. m. at Hyson's funeral home, 1300 N. street northwest. Burial will be in Cedar Hill cemetery.

Mrs. Stuermann was a native of Washington. She is survived by her husband, a son, L. H. Stuermann, Jr.; her parents, Henry G. and Kate Nau; a sister, Frieda Nau, and two brothers, William G. and Carl Nau, of this city.

Who Will Pay The Proposed District Income Tax?

Not the President of the United States, salary $75,000 a year, exempted by the Constitution.

Nor the Vice President, salary $15,000, exempted by the bill.

Nor Senators or Representatives, salaries $10,000.

Nor the Speaker of the House, salary $15,000.

Nor secretaries to the President, salaries $9,500.

Nor the Postmaster General, salary $15,000.

Nor Federal judges, salaries from $10,000 to $20,500.

Nor the District Commissioners, salaries $9,000.

Nor secretaries and clerks to members of Congress, salaries to $3,600.

Nor any Federal officials who are appointed for definite periods of time, salaries up to $12,000.

But—Those who will pay the tax include:

All resident taxpayers who earn more than $2,500 if married and $1,000 if single.

All Civil Service employees earning more than the minimum whether living here or in Maryland or Virginia; average salary $1,400.

All local corporations.

Any person, other than elective or appointive Federal employees, maintaining permanent place of abode here.

Court Bill Foes Will Organize Steering Group

President Centers Hopes on Getting Senate Vote Upon Measure.

Intrenching for a battle to seal a death verdict on the President's court proposal or any attempted compromise, Senate court plan opponents will select a "steering committee," probably headed by Senator Charles McNary (Democrat), of Oregon.

With the court bill now formally before the Senate, tagged with an adverse Judiciary Committee report, the Senate opposition is planning to organize formally in an effort to center bitter-end strategy, and co-ordinate efforts of individual leaders.

As an opposition conference was called for today to put finishing touches on this plan, the President at his press conference yesterday said his thoughts and hopes were centered on getting a Senate vote on his court bill. He said the country wanted a vote.

A correspondent asked what he wanted a vote on, his original plan for a six-judge increase, or a compromise on the proposal.

The President reiterated sternly that he wanted a vote. He said he wanted a vote without a filibuster—that he didn't think the country wanted a filibuster either.

President to Read Report.

Mr. Roosevelt said he had not yet had time to read the Judiciary Committee report (savagely attacking his court program), but he hoped to read it on Sunday.

Leading Democratic court plan opponents yesterday expressed a willingness to allow the original (six-judge increase) court bill to come to a vote any time the Administration desired.

But there were indications the opposition would fight and talk to the limit of their endurance to prevent a vote on a compromise, unless and until they are certain of enough votes to defeat it.

Informant polls of court plan strength indicate the original court bill could be defeated by a safe margin in the Senate, but a vote on a compromise would be admittedly close.

Robinson Planning Strategy.

Only on one other motion would the court plan opposition apparently assent to a ballot—a motion to postpone consideration indefinitely, which would, in effect, kill the bill.

Following a recent conference at the White House, Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson has been quietly working out compromise strategy. Senator Carl A. Hatch (Democrat), New Mexico, already

'Vigilantes' Guard Streets Of Johnstown

Police Doubled to Halt Terrorism as Strike Tension Grows.

Hoodlums Menace Loyal Workers; Gas Halts A.F.L.-C.I.O. Clash.

On the Strike Front.

Gov. George H. Earle doubled the State police force in Johnstown, Pa., as armed "vigilantes" patrolled the city ready to "drive hoodlums out" in the strike against the Bethlehem Steel Co.

At Ambridge, Pa., more than 500 persons engaged in hand-to-hand fighting between C. I. O. members and members of the American Federation of Labor. Twenty men were beaten, one stabbed.

Tom Girdler, head of Republic, said in a statement: "Must Republic and its men submit to communistic dictation and terrorism of the C. I. O. If America is to remain a free country the answer is a no."

President Roosevelt, referring to the stand of the Republic Steel Co., declared that if a man is willing to make a verbal contract he should be willing to put his name to it—Page 2.

Police Reinforced.

Johnstown, Pa., June 15.—Gov. George H. Earle doubled the force of State troopers in riot-torn Johnstown tonight as a citizens' committee threatened to "shoulder arms and drive the invaders out of town."

Hundreds of Bethlehem steel workers, defiant against the C. I. O. drive to shut down the plants until a labor contract is signed, guarded their homes with firearms against the latest terror of the big steel strike—night marauders.

Armed with shotguns, they waited on darkened porches and in upper-story windows for return of roving bands of hoodlums who stoned dwellings and shouted threats in the dead of night.

With tension in Johnstown rapidly heightening, Mayor Daniel J. Shields also swore in 250 "vigilantes" and sent them out at nightfall to patrol the streets. He said he would give "500 deputies under arms" by tomorrow. He announced he would put "3,000 American Legionnaires under arms" if necessary.

500 in Strike Clash.

At Ambridge, Pa., more than 500 men and women clashed today in hand-to-hand fighting between followers of John L. Lewis, and adherents of the American Federation of Labor, who attempted to reopen a strike-closed plant.

Before policemen's tear gas shells scattered the crowd, 20 men had been beaten, one stabbed and 50 back-to-work marchers retreated.

Burgess P. J. Cull threatened to charge charges of inciting to riot against any one of town men identified as taking part in the fighting in front of the National Electric Products Co.

The burgess took the tear gas guns from police who had broken up the disorder. Acting Police Chief Richard O'Neill and three patrolmen moved toward the plant gate, singing, "We're Going to Work."

Series of Developments.

The brotherhood is an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor.

Swearing-breaking developments marked the day at other salients on the seven-State strike front, where more than 100,000 men have been thrown out of work in the labor war.

Roosevelt Drafts Plan To Boost U.S. Income, Help Underprivileged

Europe Today

Stabilization Issue, or What to Do About Gold, Causes Conference Concern.

By Felix Morley.

Copyright, 1937, The Washington Post. No. 5 in a Series.

London, June 5.—No underlying issue at the Imperial Conference is causing more concern than the gold problem. And the anxiety exhibited is natural.

There is no other current issue more fundamental, not merely for the prosperity and stability of the British Empire, but also for that of the United States and the world as a whole.

It is only the complexity of the gold problem which keeps it from being continuously front-page news. Yet lately its significance has become such as to break through a silence engendered by the difficulty of explaining simply just what it is involved.

With the present flood of gold from Europe to the United States something more than effort to "sterilize" the inflow is obviously demanded. American action to restrain gold imports may have been taken before this article can appear in print. But any such development is unlikely to be in the nature of a final solution. No one nation can provide this by isolated action.

The gold problem is essentially international. The yellow metal is the one satisfactory medium yet devised for measuring the value, and therefore permitting the unhampered exchange of goods and services between countries with different domestic currencies.

If gold did not exist it would be necessary to find some other equally acceptable standard in order to have international trade of a nature less primitive than direct barter. And there is no such substitute.

Before the war the currency of the more important commercial nations had a legal and fixed relationship to gold. Since each currency was valued in gold each was also automatically valued in the terms of every other. The mechanics of international trade were thus, as seen in retrospect, beautifully simple. Accounts were balanced in terms

Rebel Troops Deputies Vote Driving to Cut Premier Blum Santander Road Fiscal Dictator

Fascists Delay Occupation of Bilbao Until All Escape Is Blocked.

By the Associated Press.

With insurgents on the Bilbao front, June 15.—The Spanish insurgent army will not attempt to occupy Bilbao until Basque defenders are driven from hills west of the city, field officers indicated tonight.

To do so now would be merely to exchange places with the Basques, insurgent officers said. The insurgents have broken through the ring of trenches guarding Bilbao on the east and can look down upon Bilbao from mountains in that sector.

If they entered the Basque capital now, officers of the besieging army pointed out, they would be open to shelling by government troops on the western slopes.

The main insurgent offensive is being directed against the road that leads west from Bilbao to Santander, 45 miles away. Santander is believed to be the most likely refuge for the Bilbao government should it decide to flee.

Great concentration of insurgent troops moved around Bilbao today headed for the Santander highway front.

It may require several days, officers said, for the insurgent army to complete its encircling movement. Advance patrols may get into Bilbao within the next day or so, and it is possible they already have done so in brief sallies under cover of darkness the last two nights.

But it appeared insurgent Generalissimo Franco hopes to force complete evacuation of the city to avoid street fighting or surprise bombardment by remaining government fighters before he orders Bilbao's occupation.

While the offensive moved forward on the west, eastern insurgent columns moved along the Nervion river and through mountains and valleys to drive out small groups of Basque defenders.

Moscow Writer Disappears From U. S. Embassy Building

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, June 15.—I. Mikhailski, commentator on American political affairs in the official government newspaper, Ivestia, has disappeared from his apartment in the United States Embassy Building. It was disclosed today.

The apartment was visited last Friday night by secret police agents. Mikhailski, who wrote under the pen name "P. Lapinsky," served as Washington correspondent of Ivestia in 1933 and 1935. He was the immediate predecessor there of Vladimir Romanov, who has not been heard from since his appearance as a witness at the Trotskyist sabotage trial involving Kari Radek

Hillman, Lewis Views Divided On Wage Bill

Amalgamated Head Gives Unqualified Favor to Measure.

By Robert C. Albright.
A committee attempt to economize on relief funds was overturned yesterday by the Senate's Administration majority, as the President's opposition to local relief policy changes was indicated at the White House.

The Senate, by a vote of 53 to 25, refused to turn back to the Treasury some $223,000,000 in unobligated relief balances, despite a plea for economy and sound financing by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The vote was regarded as a significant test of Senate sentiment on other committee proposals for modifying the direction and financing of Federal relief. Outstanding among these is an amendment to shift 40 per cent of WPA costs upon local communities able to bear it. Sponsored by Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, the local relief sharing amendment will encounter a stone wall of Administration opposition when the Senate today resumes consideration of the $1,500,000,000 relief measure.

Indication that the President personally is opposed to the Byrnes 40 per cent proposal was given yesterday at the White House.

Mr. Roosevelt was said to feel that no two communities are in the same position as to need for relief or ability to share the cost of relief—that a hard and fast rule of thumb amendment might work in some cases, yet work hardship in others.

Objects to Plan.

The President also is understood to object to the method provided in the Byrnes amendment for fixing allotments, if communities certify they cannot bear the cost.

He feels it would make of the President a sort of Moody's manual, to provide the credit rating of communities, it was said. He would be told to find out the facts as to credit and tax-paying ability, through a commission or inspector, and would be placed in the position of determining whether higher local taxes were needed, according to the White House interpretation.

The President was said to believe this would require the Federal Government to make findings never contemplated by the Constitution. He was represented as not anxious to have to say to the mayor and council of one town that they should boost the local tax rate, or say to another that it must take a virtual pauper's oath in order to get Federal funds. In the President's opinion, it was said, this would work hardships on himself and the community alike.

When the plan to require States, cities and towns to put up 40 per cent of local PWA costs was reached in the Senate yesterday, Senator Byrnes asked that it go over until today, when a spirited floor controversy is expected. The South Carolinian, whose sole major differences with the Administration have centered on relief and economy problems, was sustained in the Appropriations Committee by a vote of 12 to 10.

Dissenting Report.

Opposing the change, a committee minority headed by Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), Tennessee, maintained in dissenting report to the Senate yesterday that it would be "absolutely impossible to obtain a rule that will work with absolute fairness, but that the rule adopted by the President has been just as fair and just as any rule that could be adopted, and it will be much more fair and just than the (Byrnes 40 per cent) rule proposed."

Senate defeat yesterday of the Appropriations Committee proposal to turn back to the Treasury some $223,000,000 in unobligated and unspent relief balances left over from former years, followed a plea by Senator Alva B. Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, for "sound policy and sound practice" in appropriating and spending of Federal funds. He said no one knows exactly how much has been left in unobligated balances from the last seven appropriation bills.

"It seems that Congress should definitely know the amount it appropriates," Adams said. "We are taking no money which in any way was committed for public improvements. If we need more than $1,500,000,000 let us put it in this bill—let us not reach back with a drag-net to see what we can get."

7 Boat Victims' Bodies Given Up By Delaware Bay

Bowers Beach, Del., June 15 (AP).—The bodies of seven men who were swept from the wreckage of a small fishing boat which sank on a shoal 6 miles off shore were taken from Delaware Bay tonight. Only three survived the stormy night. Another was missing.

The 35-foot fishing boat Teal, chartered by ten Pennsylvanians for a day of fishing, sank late yesterday afternoon.

C. W. Stoddard, Jr., State College, Pa., high school instructor; F. C. McKee, 52, State College, fruit market proprietor, and J. E. Stine, of Altoona, Pa., were the survivors.

Those whose bodies were recovered were William Ebner, 25, Altoona; Howard Busard, 45, Altoona; William C. Dublin, 34, Altoona; Herbert Lynn, 33, Altoona; Theodore Watson, 38, State College; Clyde W. Fishburn, 48, State College; Lloyd Davis, 20, Bowers Beach, skipper of the boat.

James Dublin, 76, of Altoona, father of William C. Dublin, was missing.

Stoddard told of the sinking at a Dover hospital where the survivors were taken, suffering from exposure.

The boat struck some driftwood and started to leak about 5 o'clock yesterday, he said. A wind and thunderstorm lashed the waves over the cabin.

New Submarine Stops Over Here

The Navy's finest submarine came into Washington today, on the return lap of its shakedown cruise which has taken it to the west coast of South America. The submarine, the U. S. S. Plunger, is the last word in modern undersea craft, and is equipped with new machinery—a closely guarded military secret—and air conditioning.

The Plunger, which left New York April 15, is commanded by Lieut. G. L. Russell, who has seen two tours of duty in Washington. On the first tour of duty he studied law at George Washington University, and following completion of his course, was admitted to the bar.

After a tour of sea duty Lieut. Russell returned to Washington for service in the office of the judge advocate general, where he was engaged in legal work. Lieut. Russell was placed in command of the Plunger following its commission in November.

It seems that Congress should definitely know the amount it appropriates," Adams said. "We are taking no money which in any way was committed for public improvements. If we need more than $1,500,000,000 let us put it in this bill—let us not reach back with a drag-net to see what we can get."

lived with him in exile in Switzerland.

Washington Background.

Mikhailski, who represented Izvestia, the official Soviet government newspaper here from September, 1932, until May, 1933, divided his time between Washington and New York, occasionally making trips to other parts of the country.

Mikhailski's stay in Washington preceded American recognition of the Soviet Union. Izvestia had no representative in Washington from the time of Mikhailski's departure in May, 1933, until June 1934, when Vladimir Romm arrived here after recognition in November, 1933.

Mikhailski was not widely known in the newspaper corps, although he developed close friendships with several journalists here. These friends were incredulous of the report that he had been arrested.

They knew he was a close friend of Karl Radek, sentenced during the Trotskyist trials in January. They scoffed at suggestions that Mikhailski was involved in any treasonable actions against the Soviet or Stalin regime.

Those who knew him here described Mikhailski as of Polish origin, in his middle or late fifties, short and chunky of stature, with a brown face and very poor eyesight which required him to wear glasses with heavy lenses. He was said to have lived quietly, alone, and was of a philosophic nature, ardently devoted to reading books on American history and life. He was known as one of the old revolutionaries of Poland.

Second French Mass Swooning Baffles Doctors

70 Girls Faint in Sugar Refinery; Auto-Suggestion, Says Professor.

By the Associated Press.

Lille, France, June 15.—Seventy young girl workers fainted at their posts in a sugar refinery today in the second mass swooning to mystify investigators within five days.

Fellow workers said the girls, most of them 17 years old or less, suddenly began to tremble, raised their arms in the air and crumpled to the floor.

Similar collapses last week were attributed to the heat, but the weather today was relatively cool. Prof. Le Clerc, of the local medical school, called in to investigate the strange phenomena, said the second faintings probably were due to auto-suggestion.

No Poison Traces.

Officials feared the first collapses were due to gas and closed the refinery. Blood tests failed to reveal any trace of gas or other poison, however, and the plant was reopened.

After the girls toppled to the floor today, Le Clerc called the faintings a "psycho-pathological phenomenon induced by auto-suggestion."

"I felt I could not breathe, and had the impression of a weight on my stomach," most of the girls told Le Clerc and other physicians who treated them with opiates and camphorated oil.

"It seems a case of excessive nervousness on a large scale," said Le Clerc.

Paid $6.12 a Week.

Government and trades union delegates who inspected the factory said working conditions were good and found a special ventilating system functioning properly. Only young girls with weak constitutions seemed affected today, doctors said, and the men and boy employees escaped sickness.

The girls are paid the sugar industry's standard wage of 136 francs (about $6.12) for a 40-hour week, which includes a 20 per cent increase in wages gained under the Popular Front government.

The factory continued operation after today's recurrence of the faintings.

Alfaros to Accompany Cadets Seeing Ecuador

Eloy and Jaime Alfaro, sons of the Ambassador of Ecuador to the United States, who are now cadets at West Point, will accompany a group of eight graduates of the class of 1937 and 31 cadets of the class of 1938 on a visit to Ecuador, the War Department announced yesterday.

The delegation will leave New York at midnight, June 18, on the Grace Liner Santa Lucia.

While in Ecuador the party will be the guests of the Military School of Ecuador at Quito. The tentative program for the visitors calls for sightseeing trips and an alligator hunt. Since the Ecuadorian military school will be in session, an opportunity will be afforded to compare the routines of the two schools.

Among the guests were the Rev. Michael J. Ready, general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference; Miss Katherine E. Williams, president of the National Council of Catholic Women; the Rev. Francis J. Haas, director of St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee, a member of the Wisconsin State Labor Commission and a former director of the school.

The degree recipients will take part also in the commencement exercises today at Catholic University. Fourteen of the students will receive their Master of Arts degrees at the exercises.

Naval Affairs Group Favors New Hospital

Cost of Institution Is Fixed at $4,850,000; Sites Studied.

The House Naval Affairs Committee yesterday reported favorably a bill authorizing construction of a new Naval Hospital in Washington, to cost $4,850,000.

Although members of a sub-committee held hearings on the question of sites, no specification is carried in the measure. The purchase price for the new land, however, is limited to 15 per cent of the authorization.

It was not known yesterday whether an appropriation can be obtained at this late period for the project during the current session of Congress. The Appropriations Committee earlier refused to include funds in the naval supply bill.

The Vinson bill makes no provision for disposition of the present Naval Hospital at Twenty-fourth and D streets northwest, but Chairman Vinson has proposed in another measure that it be turned over to the National Parks Service as a site for the Thomas Jefferson Memorial.

6 Students Win College Awards

Three Catholic high school graduates won full scholarships, and three more won half scholarships to Dunbarton College of Holy Cross in competitive examinations conducted at the school yesterday.

Thirty-five young women entered the contest, representing nearly all the Catholic high schools in the District.

Miss Anastasia McCloud won the scholarship awarded to a graduate of Holy Cross Academy. The other full scholarships went to Miss Margaret Donovan, of Sacred Heart Academy, and Miss Mary Catherine Callahan, of St. Anthony's High School.

Half scholarships were won by Miss Rose Loraine John, of Sacred Heart Academy; Miss Virginia Llewellyn, of St. Paul's Academy, and Miss Doris Tansley, of St. Cecilia's Academy.

Devising Plans to Raise Standards for Under-privileged Third.

difficulty of thinking only about relief or the budget was to miss seeing the forest for looking at the trees. His conference, like several previous ones he had held, he went on, was devoted to analyzing the needs of the Nation.

These committees, which were designated several months ago by the President to advise with him, have no official titles. Sometimes they are called "the human resources committees" and again as the "human budget committee." Their task has been primarily to determine the condition of the country and to ascertain—not the average condition of life—but conditions among those in the lowest income group.

The personnel of the committees vary somewhat with the subjects under discussion. Those attending yesterday's conference with Mr. Roosevelt included its chairman, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, Mador Lubin, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Acting Director of the Budget Daniel Bell, Charles E. Merriam and Beasley Ruml, of the Natural Resources Board; C. B. Baldwin, acting head of the Resettlement Administration; Marrison S. Eccles, chairman of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System; Arthur J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board; Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins and his assistants, Corning Gill, Aubrey Williams and Arthur Burns.

"Appalling Condition."

From this group, the President indicated, he had ascertained that there were numerous families in the country whose income is so far below any decent standard that an appalling condition exists. Something must be done about it, he said. He revealed that recent findings had fully sustained the earlier contention that one-third of the Nation is ill-housed, ill-clad and ill-fed.

This one-third was found to have no purchasing power. Everyone interested in increasing the wealth and income of the Nation as a whole should be interested in providing purchasing power for this group, Mr. Roosevelt believed. Consequently, he indicated, it was necessary to have a broad national plan to build up national income in order to increase the share of this one-third. If that can be done, the President believed, the budget automatically would balance itself and the problems of relief and unemployment would disappear.

Mr. Roosevelt let it be known that these observations were not based on guesswork, but were supported by carefully developed facts. At this time the President did not feel he could speak further of his plans, but indicated his purpose to give a fuller view of what he had in mind in the near future.

No Specific Goal.

Whatever course Mr. Roosevelt is pursuing in his studies of this problem, he does not propose to set up as a goal any specific figure of national income at which to shoot. But he realizes that the speed which can be made in solving the problem of those without purchasing power depends on the progress made in increasing national income.

In this connection the Commerce Department has just announced that the national income last year totaled $32,800,000,000 or $3,300,000,000 more than in 1935, the largest increase in any year of the recovery period. The 1936 figure constituted an increase of $25,000,000,000 over that for 1932, the low point of the depression.

National income for 1936 paid out in the form of wages, salaries, dividends, interest, entrepreneurial withdrawals and other items totaled $32,100,000,000, as compared with $34,600,000,000 in 1935. The comparable figure for 1929 was $18,200,000,000, and for 1933 it was $44,900,000,000.

Joint Committee Prepared for Tax Dodging Quiz

A Congressional investigating committee decided yesterday to open an inquiry into tax dodging tomorrow and announced that names of alleged evaders presented by the Treasury would be for the "public record." Shown at yesterday's meeting are, standing from left, Senator Arthur Capper, Senator Walter F. George, Senator Robert M. La Follette, Representative Allen T. Treadway, Senator David J. Walsh, Representative Frank Crowther, Representative Fred Vinson, Representative Thomas H. Cullen, Representative Jere Cooper. Seated, Senator Pat Harrison and Representative Robert L. Doughton, chairman of the joint committee.

Problem of Stabilizing World's Gold Supply Holds the Attention of Imperial Conference of gold and only small shipments of the metal itself was necessary to maintain them.

The war and the depression have changed all that. Every nation has now devalued its currency—some more than once—in order to stimulate domestic business. Since different methods have been followed by different countries the resulting situation, from an international viewpoint, is completely chaotic.

The devalued American dollar, for instance, has a provisional value in gold. At the price set the Treasury still buys all that is offered, whether or not "hot money." But the German mark has a purely nominal value in terms of the yellow metal. And the British pound does not represent even a tentative fixed amount of gold and thus has no definite gold value whatsoever.

COMEBACK IS REMARKABLE.

Under these circumstances it is remarkable that international trade has made even the partial comeback registered in recent months. That it has done so is an indication of the vital necessity of such trade to the attainment of prosperity by even relatively self-sufficient nations. But lasting improvement cannot be expected while the basic conditions of international exchange remain anarchic. Thus there are many who argue very plausibly that trade agreement programs, such as that sponsored by Secretary Hull, are of little fundamental value until the exchanges are stabilized.

Opinion in Great Britain on the stabilization issue is divided. What the British have done is to establish a managed currency operative not merely in the island itself but also throughout the empire, among the dominions, and in those countries, like the Scandinavian, which are closely tied to England commercially. Because this trade combination follows the leadership of the British pound it is known colloquially as the "sterling area."

As between these countries there is a de facto currency stabilization with which the English are, or were until recently, fairly well satisfied. Trade within the sterling area has improved; the managed pound has been handled skillfully; it permits a flexibility important to a country which believes that its price level is not yet as high as is consistent with full recovery.

GOLD BASIS "EXTERNALLY."

In effect this agreement has permitted the internally managed currencies of the sterling area to be based externally on gold. As a limited form of co-operation it has worked well, particularly in reducing speculation in foreign exchange. But the present agreement is a long way from establishing really stabilized currency relations between the United States, Great Britain and France. And its continuation of course depends on the willingness of the United States to maintain a fixed price for gold.

Recently a number of factors have combined to make the British more anxious to obtain a permanently reliable parity between the pound and the dollar. Many business men feel that trade improvement here is beginning to approach the stage where it ought to be nailed down by stabilization. And it is asserted that the present exchange value of $4.90 for the pound is about what it should be for a permanent relationship.

It is also felt that the discussions looking towards an Anglo-American trade agreement give Great Britain the opportunity to do a little bargaining. For the assumption is that the United States is really more eager for stabilization than is Great Britain, which already has trade in the sterling area pretty well sewed up. One hears the suggestion that it would be worthwhile for America to offer the British sizable tariff concessions on the understanding that this would be coupled with the establishment of a fixed currency parity.

In effect this would mean a union of the United States with the sterling area. Another factor of developing importance is the current rapid increase in the supply of gold, both from new production and from stocks which are coming out of hoarding. In 1936, according to the Bank of International Settlements, there was an increase over 1935 in the amount of gold mined of 4,300,000 ounces, or 13.5 per cent. This increase is comparable to the amount added in the past to the world supply by either the California or the Alaska gold rush. Half of the increased production last year came from Russia and South Africa, with the former producing the lion's share.

COINCIDED WITH APPARENT PROSPERITY.

In the past such huge increases in the world's supply of gold have always coincided with bursts of material prosperity. Today that is far less true than should be the case, largely because the metal is so badly distributed. The United States, and to a lesser extent Great Britain, is choked with gold. This constant inflow Washington seeks not to utilize, but to sterilize, so that it shall not cause an uncontrollable boom.

Meantime, France is losing a large part of her reserves while both Italy and Germany are virtually drained of gold.

The government of South Africa, a country which depends very largely on the gold mining industry for material prosperity, has stressed its anxieties over the present situation at the sessions of the Imperial Conference. Better than anyone else, the South Africans know that should the United States increase taxes on foreign investors, or start taxing gold imports, the effects on the Rand would be disastrous.

These fears, coupled with the persistence of rumors that Washington may reduce the current price of $35 an ounce, explain the current weakness of African mining shares, in which very large numbers of English investors are interested. And it is partly to allay South African anxiety that Great Britain is also now buying large amounts of gold at the American price.

The Canadians and Australians, though less vitally interested, have added their representations to those of the South Africans. In consequence the subject of currency stabilization, which was not originally scheduled for consideration at the imperial conference, is in its later stages coming more and more to the fore.

In that connection it is pointed out that the new premier, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, has never given more than a qualified indorsement to that managed currency system which Great Britain, throughout the sterling area, has operated more successfully than any other country. Indeed, as far back as last October Mr. Chamberlain, then chancellor of the exchequer, predicted publicly that "in the end we will probably come back to an international monetary standard."

It would perhaps be premature to suggest that the time for this return is yet at hand. But it is certain that any overtures from America to this end would now be met in London with a favorable reception.

In fact, for the first time since 1933 it would seem possible, judging by informed opinion here, to link together the related subjects of trade agreements and currency stabilization, at least so far as Great Britain and the United States are concerned.

Whether or not a fundamental accord along these lines could include France is not so certain. But if so the vital threads of international trade might be again as firmly tied together as they were rudely torn apart by the failure of the World Economic Conference just four years ago.

Rule Is Sought To Get Tax Bill To House Floor

Consideration Tomorrow Asked; Income Levy Exemptions Win.

speedy action by the Senate District Committee.

Speaker Bankhead by implication approved the revolt against the bill in the House at a press conference yesterday when he announced that an agreement had been reached with members of the Kennedy subcommittee to substitute a realty tax increase of 20 cents for the income levy.

"There is no justification in my opinion for taxing the incomes of members of Congress," said Bankhead. "They have to pay income taxes at home. They are here only temporarily and are not legal residents of the District."

The Speaker did not explain what he meant by the income taxes members pay at home as States are barred from collecting taxes on the incomes of any Federal employees.

As amended, the District income tax proposal now is similar to the Mapes bill which passed the House six years ago with scarcely a ripple of dissent. It is also similar to the measure introduced this year by Chairman Collins of the House subcommittee on District appropriations.

Similar Bill Passed.

Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, a member of the subcommittee, conferred with the Commissioners yesterday after the parley with House leaders and obtained agreement to substitute the realty tax increase asked by House leaders.

He explained this to the District Committee, but the latter voted to amend the income-tax title instead. It later rejected a motion to kill the income tax by a vote of 6 to 4. The motion was offered by Representative Sacks (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, who said he will carry his fight to the House floor.

The amendment to exempt elective and appointive officials of the Federal Government was offered by Representative Cole (Republican), of New York. It states that the tax "shall not include any Federal official or employee elected or appointed for a definite term of years unless such person was actually a resident of the District of Columbia prior to such election or appointment."

Amendment Vote 6 to 5.

When a roll-call vote was demanded, the committee voted, 6 to 5, for the amendment. The vote: For—Palmsano (Democrat), of Maryland; Jencks (Democrat), of Indiana; Nichols, Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, and Cole.

Against—Kennedy, Bigelow (Democrat), of Ohio; Sacks, Allen (Democrat), of Delaware, and McGeehe (Democrat), of Mississippi. Dirksen, champion of the provision to include members of Congress in the tax, first voted present and then voted for the amendment as a move to save the bill.

On the Sacks motion to strike out the entire tax, the vote was: For—Jencks, Bigelow, Sacks and Nichols.

Against—Kennedy, McGeehe, Allen, Hull, Dirksen and Cole. Nichols at first voted against the motion, but switched his vote after he saw that the motion was clearly defeated and his vote would not change it.

The committee then set about to liberalize and clarify the business privilege tax. After some discussion it adopted an amendment allowing a $1,000 exemption from the gross receipts tax of three-fifths of 1 per cent upon recommendation of Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal.

This was done to prevent application of the levy to small vendors, newboys and the like. The change also exempts anyone doing business of under $1,000 gross from payment of the $10 license fee.

Boy Seriously Wounded.

Newport News, Va., June 15 (AP).—Joe McAlexander, 15-year-old Hill-ton Village youth, who police said was shot accidentally by a companion yesterday, was in a serious condition today at Riverside Hospital. His condition, unchanged during the night, was described by hospital attendants as "poor."

Leader of Irish Seeks Adoption Of Constitution

De Valera Opens Campaign to Vote Independence on July 1.

By the Associated Press.
Dublin, Irish Free State, June 15. President Eamon de Valera opened a campaign today to win adoption of a new Irish Free State constitution at the July 1 general election. De Valera appealed to all parties to accept the new document which would declare Ireland a "sovereign, independent state," and settle divergent party views after it is adopted.

Two main issues confront Free State voters in the election—the projected constitution and defeat or support for the De Valera ministry. The Dail, or Parliament, was dissolved last night after approving De Valera's constitution bill, and ordering a referendum on the measure and election of a new Parliament to take office July 21.

Another step toward home rule and independence from Great Britain, the new constitution declares the Irish people have a right to choose their own form of government, and provides for election of a president by direct vote.

At present the Free State has no titular head chosen by direct election. De Valera officially is president of the executive council, but there is no officer to take the place of the governor general, formerly representative of the King of Great Britain and head of the state. The Dail adopted a bill abolishing the office after King Edward VIII's abdication.

Gen. Cronkhite Dies in Florida Of Pneumonia

Officer Served in 3 Wars; Retired After Dispute Over Son's Death.

MAJ. GEN. ADELBERT CRONKHITE, 76, U. S. A., retired, died at St. Petersburg, Fla., yesterday following a week's illness from a kidney ailment. He was reported improved several days ago, but developed pneumonia and was placed in an oxygen tent before death.

The career of Gen. Cronkhite, which included service in operations against the Sioux Indians of South Dakota, in the Spanish-American War and in France, was marked by a dispute with the War Department over the death of his son, Maj. Alexander Pennington Cronkhite.

While leading a detail on a practice march Maj. Cronkhite was killed in a wooded section of the Camp Lewis, Wash., reservation. The finding, resulting from the investigation of the tragedy, noted that the major had accidentally shot himself.

Murder Confession.

Gen. Cronkhite conducted a personal investigation which revealed certain irregularities, and thereupon demanded the aid of the War and Justice Departments. Two men who had been with Maj. Cronkhite were arrested, and one of them confessed to killing the officer, naming the other as the instigator of the crime. He later repudiated the confession, however, and neither of the men was ever convicted.

So completely did Gen. Cronkhite throw himself into the fight to clear his son's name that he found himself in trouble with the War Department. He was ordered to Panama, but asked and received more time to continue the investigation. Finally the War Department refused to grant Gen. Cronkhite the time he thought necessary to continue his investigations.

He was then invited to retire but refused, giving as his reason that he had served his country with unblemished record for more than 40 years and had participated in three wars and had commanded the Ninth Division, as well as the Fifth and Sixth Army Corps in France.

Retired in 1923.

Despite his objections, Gen. Cronkhite was retired February 1, 1923. He declared in a letter to the adjutant general that he had been done a "gross injustice," and for a time a Congressional investigation was threatened.

Gen. Cronkhite was born January 3, 1861, in Litchfield, N. Y., and graduated from West Point in 1882. After serving in the Indian and Spanish-American wars, he took the Eighteenth Division to France, following preliminary training at Camp Lee, Va. His command was the only American division to be called into the line three separate times during the Meuse-Argonne offensive.

For his World War service Gen. Cronkhite was made a knight commander of the British Order of St. Michael and St. George and a commander of the French Legion of Honor. He also received the French Croix de Guerre, with palm.

On February 2, 1933, Gen. Cronkhite married Miss Gertrude Horne, a Pittsburgh heiress. Mrs. Cronkhite, who now lives in St. Petersburg, and a daughter, Mrs. C. C. Robertson, of Hampton, Va., were with Gen. Cronkhite when he died.

Funeral services and burial will be held at West Point, N. Y., Saturday.

Virginian to Attend Burial.

Richmond, Va., June 15 (AP)—Adjutant Gen. S. Gardner Waller said today Gov. Peery would send a representative to attend the burial Saturday of Maj. Gen. Adelbert Cronkhite, retired Army officer, who died today at St. Petersburg, Fla.

Gen. Cronkhite's last visit to Richmond was in August, 1936, when he attended the reunion of veterans of the Eighteenth Division.

Mrs. Steadman's Funeral Set Today

Funeral services for Mrs. William C. Steadman will be held at 10 a. m. today, in the Hines funeral chapel, Fourteenth and Harvard streets northwest. Mrs. Steadman, a member of a prominent Virginia family, died Monday, after a brief illness, at her home, 804 Elder street northwest. She was 66 years old.

She was the mother-in-law of George Durno, a White House correspondent, and the wife of John M. Steadman, formerly with a local transfer company. She was an active member of the Trinity Episcopal Church Guild and the Daughters of the King. She also belonged to the Daughters of the Confederacy.

Besides her husband and Mrs. Durno, she is survived by three other daughters, Mrs. James Evans, Mrs. Wallace Saunders and Mrs. Albert Lynn, all of Washington; five sisters, Mrs. Alice Swain and Mrs. Brenner Whiteley, of Washington; Mrs. William Haupt, of Baltimore; Mrs. Raymond Weinberger, of West Virginia and Mrs. Harvey Bartlett, of Red Bank, N. J.; and a brother, James Meyers, of Washington. Burial services will be held at Union Cemetery, Leesburg, Va. Rev. Reno S. Harp, pastor of Trinity Episcopal Church, will officiate.

'Non-Blowout' Tire Saves Auto In Tests Here

Van Duzer Lauds New Tube After Showing at 80 M. P. H.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

An important step toward future safety on the Nation's highways was demonstrated before some 500 open-mouthed spectators at Washington-Hoover Airport yesterday.

An automobile, streaking at 80 miles an hour down a hard-surfaced runway, was driven over a row of five-inch railroad spikes. Two tires—front and rear—blew out. But there was no accident—no lives lost and no one injured.

It was an official test sponsored by the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., to show motorists what has been done to eliminate the danger of tire trouble at high speeds.

During one of the demonstrations, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, rode in the front seat with Eddie Koffroth, ace driver of the Goodyear concern. In the rear seat were Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer and Inspector William E. Holmes, police traffic supervisor.

Tire Dynamited.

In this test, a dynamite cap, electrically controlled by Koffroth, was used to blow out a front tire.

As the car gained speed, the passengers braced themselves for the jolt. There was a terrific explosion. But nothing happened. The speeding auto continued down the runway. There was no jolt—no swerving—no sensation.

"It was one of the greatest safety demonstrations I have ever witnessed," said Van Duzer following the ride.

And then came the railroad spike test. A steel plate with nine upright spikes was placed on the runway.

Koffroth aimed for the spiked plate. Both front and rear wheels passed over the sharp points. Again there was an explosion—and then another. Both tires were ripped wide open. The car, however, remained on its course. It was shown later that tires and inner tubes contained gaping holes.

'Non-Blowout' Tube Made.

Goodyear officials pointed out that hundreds of lives are lost annually in highway accidents caused by tire blowouts. To overcome this, the company's engineers perfected a "non-blowout" inner tube.

The special tube is so constructed that only a small amount of air escapes when the tire first comes in contact with a sharp instrument. The tire remains partially inflated and thus removes all danger of the driver losing control.

Hundreds of spectators were attracted by yesterday's tests, and officials decided to continue the demonstration today.

FLOYD STIMSON (above), between puffs of his Camel, describes a typical parachute jump. He says: "I like to get out my own way. I ease out of the cockpit, holding onto the edge as I stand on the wing hooking one foot behind a strut wire. Then I crouch down and dive over, headfirst. Now what I watch out for is getting cracked by the tail of the plane. You don't want to foul your parachute. I crouch down so if the tail should hit me, it would only strike my foot. I usually make 2 or 3 turns." (In the next picture Floyd has completed a turn and straightened up.) "When I'm facing the sky," he continues, "I pull the rip cord. It's a sweet feeling when she blooms open. It's like having a seat in the clouds—with the earth rushing up at you." Floyd's work is no job for a nervous man. His cigarette is Camel—has been for 10 years. He says: "They don't frazzle my nerves."

MAN OVERBOARD

FLOYD STIMSON—OFFICIAL PARACHUTE TESTER—BAILS OUT FOR THE 1060th TIME!

HE'S stepped out into empty air well over 1000 times—yet landed right side up every time. "My order is Camels," Floyd says. "They're so mild I can smoke all I want to, knowing that Camels never frazzle my nerves. It seems as though there's no bottom in sight when I bail out—and my stomach knows it, too." Floyd Stimson continues (right), commenting on how much he enjoys Camels at mealtime. "However, a Camel helps me ease off. Camels set me right!"

MENTAL WORK, too, can be tense. Witness Miss Ruth Bruder—who spends hours in trying research work. "I light up a Camel," she says. "At times like that a Camel gives me a 'lift'."

LEONARD SPENCE, 5 times U.S. breast-stroke champion, smokes steadily. "What cigarette?" he says. "You've guessed it, Camels. After a hard swim, I turn to Camels and get a 'lift' in energy."

FENCING BOUTS are won mainly on quick response. As Joanna de Tuscan, Foils Champion, says: "Being alert counts. One reason I prefer Camels is they never jangle my nerves."

"I'M ALWAYS working against deadlines," says Foreign Service editor, J.C. Oestreicher. "My digestion's under pressure. But I smoke Camels at mealtime. Camels set me right."

'3d New Deal' Is 'Despotism,' Johnson Says

Roosevelt Seeks Dictator's Power by 1937 Bills, General Assents.

New York, June 15.—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson described 1937 legislative proposals of the Roosevelt Administration tonight as pushing "Democracy some distance toward the Fascist and Communist experiments."

The former NRA chieftain, in a radio talk, assailed as "despotism" what he called the "third New Deal," written by "a brilliant new brain trust."

"The third New Deal was a plan to make democracy work in the catastrophe of 1933, and the dangerous years of readjustment. It proposed to do that through the traditional American system without changing its form," said Johnson. "This third New Deal, when carefully examined in its entirety, seems to propose a silent but far-reaching revolution in that system."

No one can read the legislation and communications sent to Congress since the first of the year "and escape the conviction that, taken together, they push our carefully-guarded democracy some distance toward the Fascist and Communist experiments, which, for all that is said, are as alike as two peas—government by executive fiat with little if any popular participation," the general continued.

Mentioning specifically the court reorganization proposals, wage-hour and agriculture bills and the Norris proposal for seven new provinces for national planning, Johnson said they would tend to break down local government.

"In any system in which any one single authority makes what laws it desires, interprets them as it wishes, executes them as it will and controls the judging of all three, there is no check this side of heaven and no appeal on earth," he asserted.

Secretary to Bryan Married 50 Years

Mr. and Mrs. Ben G. Davis celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their home at Takoma Park, Md., yesterday.

Married 50 years ago in Knoxville, Tenn., Mr. and Mrs. Davis lived for a short time in Omaha, and then came to Washington in 1887, where Mr. Davis was a clerk in the adjutant general's office of the War Department. He was made chief clerk of the State Department in 1913 and held this post until 1925 when he resigned to enter employment of the Takoma Bank. He was clerk and treasurer for the town of Takoma Park from 1901 until his election as mayor of the town in 1928. He served as mayor for six years. For many years Davis was secretary to William Jennings Bryan.

Mr. Davis was graduated from Maryville College, Tennessee. Their seven children are with them this week to celebrate the occasion. The children are Mrs. Harold D. Ross, Mrs. J. Pridmore Prugh, of Mount Morris, Ill.; Lowell F. Davis, of Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. Jack H. Vogel, Roderic F. Davis, and Bryan Davis, of Takoma Park. There are 12 grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis will be at home today to all their friends.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Florence Howard directs the Tuesday Evening Music Club in a program of operatic selections in the garden of the Arts Club, assisted by Evelyn Scott, pianist; Margaret Tolson, Marjorie Davis and Starr Preston Tew, pianists; Tatiana Gmuche, dancer; Katherine Riggs and Meredith Hayward, annotators.

Comfortably disposed in the walled garden of the Arts Club at the cool end of a summer day, guests of the Tuesday Evening Music Club enjoyed choral and solo excerpts from ten operas presented under the direction of Florence Howard. Illusions of the stage were maintained as far as was practicable, and the numbers were so arranged that the chorus appeared in costumes befitting the selections.

The Russian school had the first share of the program with the chorus, "Come, Ye Maidens," from Chaikovsky's "Evgenie Onegin." Pauline's aria from Chaikovsky's "Pavlovsky Dama," sung by Alice Sheraton, and the "Hymn to the Sun" from Rimski-Korsakov's "Zolotoi Petushok," with Georgia Campbell as the Queen of Shemaka, and Jeanne d'Arc's aria, "Adieu, Forest" from Chaikovsky's "Orelanskaya Deva," sung by Elsa Radie.

Ina Holtzschelter gave a fluent and fresh-voiced reading of "Ou va le jeune indoue" from Delibes' "Lakme" and acquitted herself well in the florid, Helen Perry and the chorus presented a portion of the first act from Saint-Saens' "Samson et Dalila," the soloist singing at her best in the aria, "Amour, viens aider ma faiblesse."

"Vissi d'arte" from Puccini's "Tosca" was the offering of Florence Booker, and Frances Tucker sang with piquancy the page's aria, "Une dame noble et sage," from Meyerbeer's "Les Huguenots." Evelyn Scott contributed violin interludes with the "Meditation Religieuse" from Massenet's "Thais" and the intermezzo from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." The chorus made its final appearance in the prayer from Mascagni's melodrama. The ensemble work reflected credit on Mrs. Howard's musicianship and directorial discipline.

John Philip Sousa Memorial Sought By Sen. Copeland

A memorial to John Philip Sousa, the Washington composer and bandmaster, was proposed yesterday in a resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York.

Copeland asked that the new Pennsylvania Avenue bridge provided for in a Senate amendment to the District supply bill, be named for Sousa.

I WILL OIL-PLATE YOUR ENGINE in next to no time
And even quicker I can plainly state how it saves your oil and your engine to change to Oil-Plating. After I put in Conoco Germ Processed oil, which is the only oil that forms Oil-Plating, let's say you run a bit and then want to park—a few minutes or maybe hours. But every drop of Germ Processed oil will not drain back down into your crankcase like an everyday oil. Instead of that, a definite amount of this oil is always left closely plated all over the pistons, cylinders, bearings and other parts, from the bottom clear to the top of your engine. You'd say that the oil is united for good, to every working surface. I don't know of anything that will make Oil-Plating let go, no matter if you want to stop and start at every doorway, or make 500 miles a day across the mountains. Staying in place and not just splashing on and off, Oil-Plating can't leave the usual openings for friction and wear. Your smooth, quiet, cool-running engine will certainly make you notice that, and of course, your own eyes will see Conoco Germ Processed oil staying up around full.

An Inauspicious Beginning.

The joint Congressional committee named to investigate problems of tax evasion is off to a most inauspicious start. It plans to obtain from the Treasury lists of tax evaders and to hold them up to public scorn by publishing their names. The delinquents will not be asked to testify before the committee, but Senator Harrison thinks no objection would be raised to their voluntary appearance as witnesses.

This extraordinary procedure tends to confirm a strong suspicion that the chief purpose of the projected inquiry is not sober study of the defects of our income-tax laws but rather a spectacular pillorying of "malefactors of great wealth." If it can be shown, for instance, that large revenue losses have resulted from tax evasion, the Administration will have a handy defense of its failure to balance the budget and the Treasury will be given a feeble excuse for its mistakes in revenue estimates.

The House nipped in the bud the Administration's original proposal to permit Treasury officials to hold hearings in various parts of the country and make public the results of their inquiries at discretion. That checkmate strengthened hopes that the Congressional committee would conduct its inquiries in a sober and discreet manner, getting at pertinent facts without unnecessary fanfare or baiting of taxpayers. From present indications, unfortunately, the inquiry bids fair to become a punitive campaign directed against alleged tax dodgers.

If the Treasury has the names of any individuals who have evaded payment of their income taxes, these lawbreakers should be promptly haled into court to testify in their own defense, not left to the tender mercies of public opinion. But taxpayers who have broken no law, whose sole offense lies in taking advantage of sloppy tax legislation, are entitled to a fair hearing, if their testimony is considered germane. In no case is there the slightest warrant for a witch-burning holiday because of deficiencies in the law.

It is safe to conclude that the value of the investigation will be in inverse proportion to the number of "sensations" sprung in the course of hearings. The committee has a wide and fruitful field of inquiry awaiting exploration. It would be especially worth while to study the problems presented by that most obvious method of escape from income taxation—the tax-exempt security. The Administration, however, clings to this particular form of tax avoidance because it makes possible lower rates of borrowing.

Charles Lathrop Pack.

Charles Lathrop Pack, conservationist, has died in his eightieth year. Particularly those who have attended elementary school since the war days will mourn his passing, for he it was who gave them much of their interest in trees and wild life.

He, for instance, was the inspiration for the lecturers who every year draw on the Nation's blackboards the persuasive picture of a barrel into which flows a small stream representing the annual maturity of trees in the country, and from which pours a wasteful torrent representing the number of trees annually cut down for lumber. To Mr. Pack also can be traced much of the enthusiasm with which Boy and Girl Scouts as well as many adult organizations today support outdoor campaigns of all sorts.

The "war gardens" of 1917-18 first raised Mr. Pack to national prominence. With characteristic foresight, he saw that the United States would inevitably be drawn into the war and even before the declaration of hostilities he had begun his program which set 1,500,000 boys and girls at work cultivating produce in vacant lots throughout the country. Following this, he founded the American Tree Association which in 1922 planted 27,000,000 trees in the United States.

The American Nature Association, which publishes in Nature one of the few accurate yet readable chronicles of outdoor affairs, was also his creation. But Mr. Pack's conservation efforts were by no means confined to juvenile or even "popular" fields. Foundations of his donation are scattered from one end of the land to the other, all dedicated to the preservation and promotion of the Nation's heritage of green trees and fertile soil.

Happily, he leaves a son to carry on this work which long anticipated the current belated efforts to reclaim and preserve the country's natural resources. As for a monument, he leaves literally millions of trees testifying that he successfully transmitted his delight in natural beauty to hundreds of thousands of his grateful fellow citizens.

The Local Tax Muddle.

Hasty maneuvers yesterday to place the local tax bill, at present before the House of Representatives, under a special rule, suggest an eagerness to minimize the absurdities of Monday's performance. The House has recovered from its tantrum, but there is still no evidence that it will tolerate any District tax which might take a few dollars from the pockets of its members.

A reversal of the attitude assumed Monday was taken for granted because that attitude was wholly untenable. The House voted against consideration of the District tax bill even before the committee had had an opportunity to offer an explanation of its provisions. Most of the members were obviously ignorant of its terms, if not of its purpose. Yet they refused to be enlightened. With childish perversity, they denied their own committee a hearing, apparently in the belief that such action would relieve themselves of the obligation to help support the city in which they live more than six months of the average year.

In spite of Monday's petty attack upon the District as a "tax-dodgers' paradise," however, House leaders came forward yesterday with a proposal to eliminate the income tax from the bill so that Congressmen would remain exempt from local levies. In line with the argument of Representative Dies, Speaker Bankhead contends that members of Congress "have to pay income taxes at home." But, of course, they do not pay State income taxes on their Federal salaries and only those salaries would be taxed in the District. Obviously, no element of double taxation is involved.

It was Representative Dies who most vociferously proclaimed on Monday his unwillingness to submit to a District income tax "in addition to Federal and State income taxes," although his home State of Texas has no income tax and his Federal salary would be exempt in any event.

The District Committee did well to reject the House leaders' proposed increase in the real estate tax. That attempt to place a larger burden on homeowners runs counter to the general trend of revenue legislation and the advice of virtually every expert in the field. Homes are already overtaxed. One of the chief points in favor of the bill submitted by the committee is that it tends to equalize the tax burden, as has been done in nearly every other modern community.

But the substitute offered by the House District Committee is far from being an ideal arrangement. To exempt all Federal officials with definite terms of office from the payment of a local tax would constitute unwarranted discrimination against other residents who do not happen to fall into that category. The principle involved is entirely clear. All residents who benefit from the municipal service rendered by the District should help to defray the cost.

If members of the House are so fearful of contributing a pittance from their $10,000 salaries to the city in which they live most of the year, they should at least find some other equitable means of raising revenue for Washington. As its sponsors have suggested, failure of this bill would logically call for a larger Federal contribution to make up the Capital City's deficit. But many of those who are raising an uproar over the possibility of paying a small tax to the District are also bitterly opposed to a large allowance from the Treasury.

This attitude is so utterly unreasonable that it cannot be maintained. Congress must tax available income fairly or provide the voteless Capital with a substitute allowance. When members of the House confront the realities of the local tax problem, many will doubtless agree that they have acted, as Representative Dirksen said, "like a flock of shy and frightened children." Certainly the National Capital has a right to expect more considerate treatment than that from a supposedly responsible legislative body.

France's Third Try.

Despite recurrent stresses and strains, the Popular Front government in France shows no signs of breaking up. In office more than a year, it continues to command an ample majority in the Chamber of Deputies and a large measure of support among the people as a whole. Yet, in the long run, its present popularity will avail it little unless it can somehow manage to steer France safely past the financial rocks and shoals that loom so threateningly ahead.

The Blum regime has thus far failed to do so, although it has tried valiantly on at least two separate occasions. In September the franc was devalued as part of an Anglo-French-American move toward tentative stabilization of the exchanges. But while this action did give a fillip to French trade and industry, its effects, on the whole, have been disappointing.

More and more the rise in the internal price level produced in part by the very social reforms which have given the Blum government its popular support, has tended to offset the anticipated advantages of devaluation. The expected boom in industry which was to lead to a great increase in tax receipts has only partially materialized. Tax income, instead of rising, has been falling, and since this has coincided with increased national expenditures for armaments and other purposes the gap between governmental income and outgo has widened.

No wonder, then, that the government found it necessary this spring to float an eight billion franc loan at a high rate of interest to obtain essential funds. Even then, M. Blum found it necessary to promise French business and industry a "breathing spell" from further social reforms in order to establish the confidence necessary to successful flotation of the loan. Yet this second attempt to surmount the financial crisis also failed. Recently, the parlous budgetary situation has been reflected in a weakening of French exchange and a near collapse of the market for government bonds.

The Chamber of Deputies and the Senate are now to be asked to give the government one more chance to solve the budgetary problem. Alarmed by the circumstance that the budget deficit now amounts to more than 40,000,000,000 francs ($1,760,000,000) the cabinet seeks plenary power to take whatever action is necessary. Exactly what measures it will espouse it vouchsafed that authority remains to be seen. The presumption is that while the limit of governmental borrowing from the Bank of France is to be extended, additional taxes are to be decreed.

Whether these and any other measures which the government may decide on will do the trick is by no means certain. But it is clear that unless they do the French situation may become extremely serious.

Matching Relief Funds.

Senator Byrnes' amendment to the relief bill, providing for a 40 per cent matching contribution by local governments to cover the cost of WPA projects, faces a sharp fight on the floor of the Senate. Dissenting minority members of the Appropriations Committee have already submitted a report stating their objections to this and other amendments designed to limit executive control over relief funds. They regard the arbitrary division of costs as "administratively unworkable and inconsistent with the objectives of the program."

Replying to criticism of the existing lack of uniformity in the distribution of WPA funds, Mr. Hopkins' defenders point out that in New York, where the State and localities have contributed only 7.2 per cent of WPA project costs, over one-third of the total relief outlay during the past four years has been financed locally. On the other hand, in South Carolina, where the State and local governments have defrayed 23.5 per cent of the cost of WPA projects, the Federal Government has borne over 90 per cent of all relief costs. During 1936 New York's contribution to relief amounted to about 37 per cent of all relief outlays in that State, while South Carolina contributed about 17 per cent of the total spent on its unemployed.

These great sectional disparities merely emphasize the complete lack of any orderly method of procedure in apportioning the relief burden, and point to the need of some definite rule that would compel the backward States and their subdivisions to assume greater responsibility for the unemployed and destitute. No doubt a great many exceptions to any uniform rule would have to be made. That is provided for, however, by the Byrnes amendment, which properly places upon the suppliant State the burden of proof in establishing its claim for more liberal treatment.

The constitutional and statutory obstacles in the way of State borrowing for relief purposes certainly do not justify perpetuation of a system that bears so inequitably upon the several States.

Mr. Hopkins has admitted his inability to determine what local governments can afford to pay toward financing Federal relief projects. The volume of unemployment, moreover, has been a matter of guesswork during the entire time that the Federal Government has been engaged in administering relief. Under these conditions, Federal funds have been allocated in accordance with rules known only to the inner circle entrusted with their disbursement by the President. According to the testimony of Mr. Hopkins, they have been placed where relief rolls are heaviest. However, the length of relief rolls is no criterion of the extent of the need, in view of the widely differing standards of the States themselves.

Until Congress is ready to throw overboard in its entirety the hybrid system that now exists, an arbitrary apportionment of relief costs on a uniform basis is preferable to a system of leaving everything to executive discretion. With the Byrnes amendment there would be at least an inducement to save taxpayers' money. Without it, the WPA would undoubtedly allocate all the money it can obtain from Congress according to rules of its own making.

Letters to the Editor

Fidelity Reorganization.

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: Last July the United States Treasury closed the Fidelity Building and Loan Association. Eighteen hundred depositors were given to understand at the time that it would most likely be open again in about two weeks. Instead, almost a year has gone by for a long time. Why couldn't they have "blocked" it long ago so that something else could have been devised if they proposed to block it anyway? And who but the depositors have to pay the salaries of the receiver and other officials over this long drawn out process?

Another excuse for failure to open under one form or another is that 3,000 depositors have not been heard from. Is this any reason why the other 15,000 should be "left to dangle"? In any other type of proceedings a deadline is set and after due publication of notices failure of the few to respond incurs some penalty on them, or at least they are not allowed to "hold up the works" for all the others.

Only a Rip Van Winkle could keep calm while the Treasury straightens out some of our back troubles. If they intend to make posthumous settlement we'd like to know it now so we can simply forget it.

Washington Taxi Drivers.

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: I want to compliment the Washington taxi drivers on their neatness, cleanliness and manners. I noticed the ones that were picking up the District Building last week. They were all very clean, and I understand them men gave their time without pay to fight for their rights to make a decent living.

I have no relatives driving cabs, no close friends even, but I do hope to see the taxi drivers make a "decent living" without having to work 12 and 16 hours a day. They deserve a break.

C. I. O. And The Republic Steel Strike.

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: C. I. O. John Lewis' appellation of Tom Girdler, president of Republic Steel Co., as a "monomaniac" and "superman" is a laugh and would seem to indicate that when Greek meets Greek, John Lewis knows how to squeal. John tells us that Tom is going to be responsible for the great mass of liberty-loving Americans will stand behind you.

Why is Tom going to be responsible? When the Republic meets such force with similar methods John Lewis and his congressional sympathizers fill the newspapers with criticism of Republic. Their thought seems to be that Republic workers ought to take their beating and like it!

When the C. I. O. gets the worst of it, their compatriots in other towns form automobile gangs and, armed with weapons and missiles, descend on Republic's plant much as the Black Legion operated. Then when vigilantes gather to protect Republic from such invasion, the leaders of the C. I. O. proclaim to the world that the sacred rights of labor are being threatened and bloodshed is in the air! Not content with sending plug-uglies against Republic, the C. I. O. protects the pugs with their women as fronts in order to persuade the reading public that Republic wars on wives and daughters! That is the kind that is labeling

View of Fascists.

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: I wish to inform Mr. E. H. Heiskell, who wrote you on June 12, that the Spanish loyalists had had many agreements with the fascists, but that not a single one was ever kept by the fascists; that the fascists in Spain are not different from those in Italy and Germany, who have broken every law—God's and man's, national and international—since their rule; that the loyalists are defending democracy as we did in 1776 and 1860-65; that it was the fascists who started this rebellion against legitimate democracy, so that they could subject the Spanish people under a rule of terror, blood and brimstone like those in Germany and Italy; that the word "nationalists" was invented by the fascists in order to confuse the people and thus escape, if only temporarily, the accusing eyes of the world; that there are no words to fully describe the monstrous atrocities committed by the fascists to the peaceful, liberty-loving people of the world; that the only language fascism understands and speaks is the mailed fist; that it is un-American, base and treacherous to sympathize with fascists, who have proved themselves to be enemies of all democracies, freedom and progress.

Abolish Air Guns?

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: How could we go about having New York's new law abolishing of air guns and pistols enacted here?

Surely we must have a good percent of their number of blinded children.

Besides, they are destructive to birds of which Washington with all its trees and shrubs, needs many. I have no relatives driving cabs, no close friends even, but I do hope to see the taxi drivers make a "decent living" without having to work 12 and 16 hours a day. They deserve a break.

From A Southerner.

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: Notwithstanding the fact that I am a Southerner by birth, I wish to herein say how very much I enjoyed Benny Goodman's two colored orchestra members, Lionel Hampton and Teddy Wilson, when they were at a local theater.

It seems to me that their race would have been very proud of them if it had been possible for Washington's Negro population to have entered the theater, from which they are barred.

Race prejudice is unfortunate and I am from Nashville. Those two colored boys are real artists and the nine of us sat through two shows to say so, in print!

Mail And The Strike.

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: A press dispatch from Washington quotes Senator O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, as asserting before the Senate committee on postoffices that it was plain that by sending parcels to the Republic Steel Co. workers an attempt had been made to use the postoffice to break a strike. A somewhat similar statement was made by Assistant Postmaster Jesse M. Donaldson, who said that it looked as though the newspapers had aimed to break up the strike.

In other words, the fact that employees of the Republic Steel Co. preferred to continue working, rather than obey Dictator John L. Lewis, of the C. I. O., deprived them of their right to receive parcels through the mails that had been held by a C. I. O. committee to be "irregular." Men peacefully at work must not be allowed to have food mailed to them, because this would upset the plans of the "peaceful picketers" to starve them out.

Do I sleep, do I dream? Are things what they seem, when a United States Senator declares that establishing the rights of every citizen to receive mail sent him is an attempt to break a strike?

Noise in Washington.

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: Please thank "Sane Living" for his letter in The Post of June 12 about noise. I did not see the one by "Fides" and regret it.

Washington is a bedlam and the nights are worse than the days. Let's all pull together for a little sanity and peace.

In Rome a horn blower is fined or arrested, and most careful driving is the result as well as the much to be desired quiet. We can not stop the tom cats, but a new rule against pianos, radios and insane conversation after 10 or 11 p. m. would greatly add to Washington's repose.

Americans are going mad by the thousands every year, and it's my personal opinion that noise is a great contributor to the cause.

Mud Slinging.

To the Editor of The Post-Sir: Why is it fair in your opinion for everyone in the country from the humblest to the highest to "sling mud" (I use a recent expression of yours) at the President and for it to be entirely wrong for him even to make an unfavorable comment regarding the members of the Supreme Court taking their vacation, when it's his conviction that the unfinished work is of immediate and vital concern to the Nation?

Would it not be far more inspiring and profitable to all if the opponents and critics of the President would get busy leaving the "mud" out of their propositions and would offer to him and the Nation a constructive program?

The White Sox.

If you have any doubt that the world is upset don't just take a look at the standing of the clubs in the American League, where the Chicago White Sox are up around the top going into July.

It seems to me it must be the first time the Sox have been up so high so late in the season since 1920, when Charlie Comiskey, convinced against his will, had to fire seven of his athletes for throwing the World Series the year before and broke up a ball club which was regarded the best ever assembled.

Of course these are not the same Sox with whom I used to clutter around the league, for most of the sterling athletes of that day have been sent to the boneyard years ago—God help them!

They were nice people and some of them were fine ball players, but the club just wasn't a team, and, anyway, there was always a feeling in the troupe that the management had coppers around reporting how many cornflakes a fellow ate at the breakfast table and whether he hung up his Panama in the morning. It made for uneasiness and nerves and surliness among the hands, and the managers didn't have much authority either.

The only active hand of the present of whom I have any knowing is Zeke Bonura, the heavy-hitting first baseman, who is new himself, but a throwback to my day, nevertheless. I hear tell of a time when Zeke was fresh up from New Orleans and saw a fellow on Broadway selling those big Zeppelin balloons that come in paper envelopes but blow up to the size of tiger watermelons.

Zeke said he certainly wished he could take one of those home to the folks, and Jimmy Dykes said, "Why not?" And Zeke said, "I could never get it into my suitcase."

Zeke would have been at home with my White Sox, especially when Lena Blackburn had them and Art Shires, the wonder man and absentee poet, for lack of anything more interesting to do at night would go to the boss's room and smack his ears off. Lena didn't mind very much, and it did sort of relieve the monotony.

I think Shires owed his fame mostly to Ed Burns, the baseball writer of the Chicago Tribune, who spotted him as material the minute he came into the training camp that spring and started writing horrible poetry in his name. Every day or so Ed would write one of those poems—and they were bad enough at the start, but as Ed warmed up they got worse and presently developed into the worst poems the world had ever known.

Art entered into the spirit of the thing, set himself a pose as an eccentric and never did unkind himself, although he might have been a very fair ball player if he hadn't undertaken to be an act on and off.

One time I caught the White Sox in New York on the last trip of the season when they were in a terrible tussle with the Red Sox for eighth place. The first day they played a double-header with the Yankees that ran to about 28 innings before they were licked. Then we went to Boston for four days and broke even, and the total game wasn't enough to pay for the balls, let alone the fares and hotel expenses.

Then our club lost three out of four to Connie Mack, while Boston lost the same to Cleveland or somebody, and finally, in Washington, our White Sox dropped them all and clinched eighth place to the derisive sneers of a small company of pass-trade. By that time the entire civilized world had lost interest in the top of the league, where the Yanks were seven or eight lengths in front, and was rooting for either our White Sox or the Red Sox to win eighth place.

We would get comical telegrams at night telling our athletes that Chicago was counting on them to bring home not the bacon but the rind, and the poor players were so disgusted and downhearted that they were not speaking to anybody.

But we always took it for granted that the White Sox would finish either seventh or eighth, and their ambitions never ran higher than sixth, even at the start of the season. They seemed to belong way down, and Chicago and the league and everybody would emit sarcastic remarks about our lads if they put on a spurt and moved up to fifth for a day.

They used to say, "Our White Sox have won one consecutive game; it looks like first division sure," and then laugh.

Now I read where our White Sox have won 12 out of 14 and are crowding the Yankees. If that can happen anything can happen here.

Author Changes Spots

By Charles F. Moore, Jr.

THE author of "Studs Lonigan" and "A World I Never Knew" here brings to his public a group of short stories and one long novelette. Six of the stories already have appeared, or are appearing, depending upon the way you feel about Mr. Farrell's work, the printed page. The other ten and the novelette have not. Sad fact of the entire matter is that "this public"—the readers who went overboard in a big way for the "poolroom-alley-and-back-of-the-barn" technique that told, in a compelling, gritty, and often brutal way, the story of Studs Lonigan—very probably are going to be bitterly disappointed in a majority of the items of this collection. And under yet is the fact that other readers, those who read "Studs Lonigan" and "A World I Never Knew" for Mr. Farrell's blunt way of putting down the facts of life, intentionally will overlook "Can All This Grandeur Perish?"

It will be their own great loss if they do. At least an even dozen of the 17 works presented in the book use no word that could not be spoken with propriety in the nursery. And these dozen are the best in the lot. The others, and I am sorry that the novelette, entitled "Seventeen," is included, could be eliminated and this abridged collection would still constitute your money's worth, easily.

FOR instance: "MENDEL AND HIS WIFE." In 7,000 words, more or less, the author paints, in this particular story, the painful though gorgeously done picture of a former Chicago soap-box orator and his wife, now living in Paris on what small income Ruby, the wife, receives from her parents in the States and, what consciousness sponging the pair of them can do on the friends who visit them. Here's an example of the kind of writing Mr. Farrell can do when he wants to; it describes a typical afternoon with Mendel, the writer:

"Mendel sat down at his desk by the open dining room window and started to write a critique of an art exhibit, determining that it would not be a mere catalogue, as were most critiques. He worked for five minutes, when he was interrupted by Ruby. She wanted a glass of water. He wrote for five more minutes, when she called for a cigarette. Five more minutes and she asked for a chair on which she could rest her feet. After filling two and one-half pages, he put his art criticism aside and began on a story entitled, 'The Birth of a Writer.'"

"THE PROFESSOR." This is the best of the 17 and can stand on its feet in any company of short stories, contemporary or otherwise. Professor Saxon teaches a course in short-story writing at a Midwestern university. He once aspired to being a great writer himself. That ambitious bubble definitely pricked, he seeks to bring out genius in others.

And does this bit, from this story, sound like the author of "Studs Lonigan"?

"He was a failure and, yes, something of a clown. But he must be serious and feel that he was importantly contributing to the things that were human and valuable. Life was no longer a game, a race to be run, an experience to be exploited. It was something very precious, and he wanted to clutch that preciousness tightly within himself . . . forever . . . and someday his grip would relax, weaken, stiffen, and the preciousness would drop like some beautiful choked thing. Dead!"

"WANTED: A CHAUFFEUR." This is a well-turned piece of writing to tell the story of a boy who, with the best of intentions, wants to marry a girl who, with no such intentions, wants only a good time as we have read in many a long day. And 90 per cent of it is conversation . . . the kind of conversation that does a job of characterization that no amount of descriptive writing could ever do. Such as this, between Charles, the highly honorable but slightly dumb hero of the tale, and Mrs. Brown, mother of the girl Charles wants to marry:

"How is your business, Charles?"
"Very good, Mrs. Brown. In fact, I just bought a new car."
"I'm glad to hear that, because I like you Charles. I think you're a young man with gumption and ambition. You know, you're going to be a real success. I'll bet your mother is proud of you. I would be if I were your mother."
"I try to be. I work my hardest to be a success, because I believe in hard work."

"That's why I like you, Charles. And you say business is good again?"
"THE ORATORY CONTEST." This, too, is top-notch. In what, when he is finished, the reader feels is too few pages, Mr. Farrell takes one into the home of a more or less frustrated family whose older son is on the eve of entering the finals of an oratorical contest. Mr. O'Dell cannot be present at the auditorium where the finals are to be held because of the discomfort a new addition to the O'Dell family is giving her. Mr. O'Dell and the younger brother, Mickey, are there. The pitiable father, having battled with life and given his best without scoring a point, is very proud of a son who is rather ashamed of him; of being his son. Gerry O'Dell steps to the rostrum:

"He seemed so calm, as if there were not a worry in his head. He stood there, straight, dignified, and, ah, but wouldn't he be a pride to his father in the years to come. O'Dell leaned forward, listening attentively as his son's deep and full voice carried down the auditorium."

But you rather wonder, as the story ends, whether Gerry will be a pride to his father, or, despite what success the boy may achieve, a great hurt, a deep wound.

Well, there's a sample or two. Mr. Farrell will prove with this book to a great many people who did not already know it that he can bring the comedy and tragedy, the joy and pathos of living to his readers without the use of the so-called outhouse technique that probably brought so many buyers to the stands for copies of the three books that gave us the life story of his famous Studs Lonigan.

"CAN ALL THIS GRANDEUR PERISH? AND OTHER STORIES," by James T. Farrell. (Vanguard, $2.50.)

Life on a Danish Farm

"THE CASTLE OF CONTENTMENT," by Jaegermester Plov (Gunnar Nislev). (Willitt, Clark & Co., $2.)

The sub-title of this book is "Letters from a Danish Farm." But neither title could possibly pin down the character or quality of these 52 "chapters." Perhaps they could be letters, but they are not exactly sketches nor is it quite correct to call them essays. Jaegermester Plov, the pen name of Gunnar Nislev, sets down reminiscences and observations, conjectures and conclusions. He is said to be extremely popular with all classes in Denmark, and this is easily understood. But that has always been the success of happy people—and Jaegermester Plov is obviously happy.

Sometimes he becomes disgusted with some of the phases of a Danish farmer's life, but the relief of returning to that same living after a few days in the city is so great that it discounts all else. He likes the naturalness of the world about him, and for his children and encourages them in all their simple desires from trading child-fashion to building and sailing boats of their own. His reasoning over situations is sane, but somehow delightfully amusing. He disapproves of taking young birds from their mothers, but he says about crows that they will only grow up to be marauders and forces of evil whereas his children will tame them to gentleness and decent habits. He will not allow the youngsters to have a phonograph, but they may have any musical instrument their hearts desire provided they make the music with their own hands.

Plov writes of a land of which little is read in this country. A few of the customs and some of the nature lore is interestingly strange, but the general tone is one of happy familiarity with all of which he speaks. When the writer says, however, that the old folks say "the winters aren't as cold as they used to be" and that he simply hates the starlings, one finds it difficult to believe that he is not writing from a short distance beyond Anacostia.

And after all, his philosophy of living, if such it may so truly be called, would do for any climate or any class. He never states it in terms which could be outlined thus and so, but there it is just the same. Luckily for the reader in this case, this man who knows how to live also knows how to write. Many of us experience happiness and contentment and sometimes we find a little secret which seems very important and we would so much like to tell some other people. But simply because we do not know how, we have to be inadvertently selfish. Perhaps it is this reason which makes us especially appreciate the ability in others to describe the quality of satisfaction, especially when the writing is not weighted with consciousness of self, but rather buoyed up with a humorous "inlook."

This is the first publication in English of any of Plov's work, although two others have preceded it in the Danish language. "The Castle of Contentment" has been translated by Astrid Rosing Sawyer and Llewellyn Jones, and much credit is due them for a natural development into English idiom and a refreshingly varied vocabulary with never a word's meaning clouded through misuse. "Life's Delicate Children"

Helen Anderson's First Novel Shows Rare Promise.

By Mary Bartlett.

This first novel of Helen Anderson is a very drastic reminder, though phrased with exquisite skill and beauty, that some human beings most admirably fitted to know life with joy are also suited to sorrow to such an extent that it becomes intolerable to them—"Life's delicate children," as Thomas Mann appropriately named them. "Pity for Women" is unfortunately, the title of the novel. It is true that there is an apparent attempt to condemn a society that ostracizes the homosexual, and Ann Sutley's story could be interpreted as a slightly distorted polemic against the conventions of men and the customs of modern marriage which deliver over to fear such women as Ann Sutley, to a fear so potent as to destroy them.

It is most just to say that, whatever the author's intentions, the story, dealing with two distinct and equally abnormal types of environment, is essentially that of all hypersensitive, mute and overlying young girls who, perhaps in no known environment, can adjust to life and endure it. Each sensual experience for such a one sets up an inordinate vibration throughout the whole organism.

Miss Anderson's knowledge of emotions, especially those of women, and of involved and secret motivations and thought processes is evident in every line. Her imagery is so vivid, so completely original, that, at times, it exemplifies Emily Dickinson's famous definition of poetry. By heightening normal experience, as the dramatist does, and by fitting the action to a pattern inescapably logical, the author gives her story force and significance in relation to the life of the average person. Against the sinister background, the normal stands clear—surely this is the test of art.

Ann Sutley is one of the many young girls "who, from the beginning, have a certain purity of limb, pallor of cheek and lost expression of the eyes. They are unformed, always childlike, and yet with something so solid in them that no one, not even they themselves, has the power to change the force directing their lives." As their friend Elizabeth described her "she is so mute; she never could speak easily and she isn't clever. If you closed your eyes and listened she would give very little to the other senses . . . Beneath the appearance, Ann is extremely aware of her physical surroundings, of her own slightest variation of emotion, and of the intrinsic nature of every woman she meets. There are very few men in the book, and these few are almost completely unreal and almost no attempt is made to interpret them.

Queen's Folly

"QUEEN'S FOLLY," by Elizabeth Thorne. (Harcourt, Brace & Co., $2.50.)

Boldly labeled "A Romance," Miss Thorne's latest has again rung the bell with what might have been as true a story as any that ever began with a true foundation. That foundation in this case is the fact that a nameless man carried a secret message to the girl who was to become Elizabeth of England, on the night of Little Edward VI's death, thereby probably saving her life. Miss Thorne accepted history's challenge in the anonymity of this man and has constructed an absorbing tale.

The title role is played by "a little house" way down in Worcestershire which began as a modest priory built in the best thirteenth century manner but falling into ruins in 1550. How Elizabeth bestowed it as a reward upon a landless youth who founded a tradition of his own is the sort of romantic fiction that is intelligent and that carries its reader purring along to a delightfully satisfactory and improbable conclusion.

Beginning with Anthony Brand's simple restoration of the house to make it habitable, his marriage and parenthood, "Queen's Folly" progresses from 1553 down to 1898 in several steps looking in on Brand descendants at intervals as the tradition and the house, both grew and prospered.

As the present is reached, the house, now enlarged and modernized upon an impressive extent, falls upon evil days—the tradition is effecting its own suicide. But the compelling life-size portrait of the Virgin Queen, which was part of the original Brand's reward, surveys the decay serene in the room which was built to house her. Then the advent of a charming good fairy, the best (the word is used seriously and advisedly) Hollywood manner, and the happy ending, but one which Miss Thorne has admirably kept from being offensive in its timeliness. PAUL WALTER.

HELEN ANDERSON.

This is not a criticism of Miss Anderson's technique; the men are and are meant to be superhuman. "Pity for Women" is divided into two parts: one for Ann, and one for Judith, the weird but powerful older woman who is the visible instrument of Ann's destruction. It might almost be said the novel is the story of two gardens: the garden below Ann's window at the Christian Women's Club in the first part, and Judith's garden in the second. The Christian Women's Club is a boarding house presided over by Miss Greenwith (perhaps a Joycean-made word) who passes among her guests with the "cataleptic smile of a porcelain antique." Even so the garden was well cared for, it was lovely, and a tree grew up from there and passed her (Ann's) window like a dream.

Throughout the first half of the book Ann always seems, symbolically, to be near her window looking down upon the garden, watching the tree, watching the rain, pondering fear and pondering love. Elizabeth, her roommate and friend, makes this life beautiful—the pale, slender and strong Elizabeth, who brings to Ann first David and then Judith. Elizabeth herself has renounced love of any kind; the implication is clear. Ann is not the first young girl to love her, and Elizabeth was well cared for, it was lovely, and a tree grew up from there and passed her (Ann's) window like a dream.

Literature and Larceny Note: In 1900 a Mrs. Leigh Perrot was tried at the Taunton assizes after seven months in the county jail . . . She was charged with stealing a card of lace from a Bath milliner's shop . . . as the law then stood, conviction would have meant a sentence of death but in practice it would probably have been commuted to transportation to Australia . . . The Oxford University Press is bringing out a book on the trial . . . Literary value? . . . She was the aunt of Jane Austen!

The Houghton Mifflin fellowships for 1937 have been awarded . . . The winners are Dorothy Baker and David Cornwell DeLong . . . Mr. DeLong is writing a long novel laid in Holland where he spent his childhood . . . Mrs. Baker's is quite original, I think . . . It is the story of a jazz musician, genius in the art of "swing" . . . It should be de-louvis . . . I'm in my second flapperhood.

Dorothy Smith went into Brentano's the other day for a book but she told the clerk frankly that she couldn't remember either its title or author . . . All she knew was that it had something to do with a pudding . . . The alert clerk immediately said "Neighbor to the Sky," written by Gladys Hasty Carroll . . . The irony of it is that hardy puddings are not especially popular on the Smith menu on account of Mr. Smith is a Yale man . . .

James Still, young Kentucky poet whose first volume of "Hounds on the Mountain" is published this month by Viking, is librarian of the Hindman Settlement School in the Kentucky mountains . . . One of his tasks is to deliver books to the outlying communities and these he carries on his back, balancing as many as 20 volumes at a time . . . Now there's a problem for statisticians—what are the 20 best books for balancing on your back?

Simon and Schuster report that Dale Carnegie's book, "How to Win Friends and Influence People" has passed the 420,000 mark . . . At this rate, Utopia ought to be just around the corner with everybody just one big happy family . . .

They say Pen Hlope even mumbles about a certain "Elizabeth Moncre" in his sleep . . . But that doesn't mean he is deserting the bachelor ranks by any means . . . That happens to be the name of his heroine in a book which his publishers and I hope will be out before many more years have passed . . .

Putnam is bringing out a new book by Ethel Mannin on July 23 entitled "Women Also Dream" . . . Miss Mannin is the English authoress at whom Noel Coward thumbed his literary nose on page 100 of his autobiography, "Present Indicative" . . . No wonder, after what she said about him in her life story . . . I'm beginning to sound like that quitting party in "Way Down East" . . .

Harper and Brothers have just received a letter from Bernie Lay, father of the author of "I Wanted Wings" . . . It's too good not to print: If there are the rudiments of a heart in the editorial bosom, please commiserate a victim of self-pity. In childhood, I was known as "Mr. Lay's son." Later, in youth and early manhood, I became "Mr. Lay's brother," he being a man of some eminence. Then, at 44, I married an estimable woman and soon became known as "Mrs. Lay's husband." In Charlottesville, where I lived for seven years, I am a member of a small local club, to whose members I have been known for the first time in my life as "Mr. Lay." Now I find that in this coterie of cronies my individuality is about to take wings—and I don't want wings—due to your industrious publicity activities. I am becoming known in the club as "Mr. Lay's father." Have a heart and leave me this last refuge of my ego. (Signed) Bernie Lay.

Dutton announces a new mystery novel for July called "The Case of the Crawling Cockroach" . . . Modern version, I suppose, of who killed Cock Roach?

Bennett Cerf writes me that his office never shows him The Post book page when it doesn't contain any notices of Random House books . . . Evidently his secretary, like the sun dial, believes in recording only the sunny hours . . .

Just when I was about to get in a veil and lily-of-the-valley mood, on account of this is the month for romance, I snagged my illusions on a barbed phrase from Mathilde Elker's new book, "Key Next Door" . . . It is: "All marriage was anonymous, the plighting of uncertainties. It worked because it had to. It built up the tangibilities; a joint bank account, a house in joint ownership, children with joint demands, upon both parents, of hunger and helplessness" . . . So now I'm going to read something by Kathleen Norris real quick so I can get this nasty taste out of my mouth . . .

Story Deals With Lonely Inhabitants of a Women's Club.

abeth confesses that she herself could have loved—does love—Judith. Aware of Ann's unconscious struggle, Elizabeth finds for her the sensitive and kindly David. But, with seeming inevitability, she brings her also Judith and David is overpassed.

A series of grotesque and shocking incidents connected with men, the love of men, birth and marriage are completely convincing. The reader will be found familiar by all women, remembering their school days, beautiful and with no hint of the perverses.

In Judith's house, however, a new life begins for Ann. With great skill Miss Anderson has given this strange and dreamlike existence an unquestionable reality. The reader dwells in the same withdrawn and half-mad world as do the various women and young girls who come and go within the limits of Judith's life. Through sheer sound and word associations, certain emotional states are set up, and one reads them somewhat as one listens to much of Wagner's music. One example will suffice: "Nothing move, live not, nothing pressed, nothing press. Dear face, blind the . . . Yes, no world but you . . . Judith, hair fallen, hair straining against the wind, hair sweet . . . in the islands, the ferns know softness, fainting sweet . . . thread the white fingers, wreathe. Move not . . . Move not . . ." (The dots here are part of the text and do not indicate omissions.)

These passages are rare and stand out against the lucid style of the rest of the book. In fact Miss Anderson has something akin to Dorothy Richardson's power to extract the bit of meaning from each seemingly trivial event and to invest it with evocative significance. The surrealism of the certain passages is deliberate and effective.

Ann's tragedy finds its ending in a strange and moving ceremony devised by Judith as a last desperate effort, but too late, Ann comes to it from the second garden that dominated her life, Judith's garden.

"PITY FOR WOMEN," by Helen Anderson. (Doubleday, Doran, $2.50.)

"NORTHERN SUMMER," by Gosta G. Gjelstrom. Translated from the Norwegian by Joran Berkelund. (Dutton, $1.50.)

Here is a thoroughly inconsequential and thoroughly charming little book. "Northern Summer" is of the nature of an idyll, told with a striking simplicity of style and thought. The story, which cannot by any means be termed a plot, is that of a memorable episode in the life of a Norwegian family. The author buys a small farm on "The Island" on a Norway fjord and there, with his wife and four children and old Marthe the servant, spends a rustic and joyful summer. In his narration of this experience, the author reveals the now almost-forgotten poetic qualities of a farmer's existence.

All the details of farming, the milking, the haying and even the fertilizing of the fields, are described in the terms of the nature poet. Their life in that setting is one of peasants close to the soil but with a predominating added humanism achieved by their conscious escape from civilization. It is this romantic note, the naive delight in "getting back to nature," that at times brings the book pitifully close to the childlike and quaint in character. Yet this danger is always averted: sometimes by a truly poetic piece of description, sometimes by a bit of well-placed humor. And always the author's rare understanding of his children and their mute thoughts keeps his story in the realm of the probable.

"Northern Summer" is the relation of an experience which, in retrospect, takes on wholly ideal qualities. It is this obviously idealistic and nostalgic attitude of the author that constitutes the charm of his book. One welcomes the assurance that such experiences can still be found and that they can, moreover, be related in so captivating a manner as this.

Kipling's Workshop

By Theodore Hall.

KIPLING abominated any writing ink but the blackest, preferred a pen-holder with a hand-dipped Waverley nib, and to specially made, large, bluish-white writing blocks, with which he was prodigal, he remained all his life as faithful as a Musselman to Mecca.

What these "old-maideries" had to do with the Daemon that wrote "Kim" and "The Jungle Books" you are not to inquire. It is the curiousness of some writers that they cannot scribble unless they are wearing a black tie; of others that a 2-inch brass Buddha must be within range, and though Kipling kept a little leather crocodile and a paper weight once on the table of Warren Hastings, his fetiches and rites were of the mildest. What they were, how he wrote, wherein lay the virtues of his workshop, these things we are now to pluck from his candid, reticent, friendly, bristling autobiographical sketch, "Something of Myself."

If, to the dry-eyed professional writer as well as the wooing, wishful amateur, it seems merely endearing that Kipling performed his "Higher Editing"—which means deletion and more deletion—by means of a camel-hair brush dipped in ink jealously ground from the Chinese stick, then let the following passage of wisdom stride through that quaintness. He is speaking of his first Anglo-Indian tales.

"They were originally much longer than when they appeared, but the shortening of them, first to my own fancy after rapturous re-readings, and next to the space available, taught me that a tale from which pieces have been raked out is like a fire that has been poked. One does not know that the operation has been performed, but everyone feels the effect. Note, though, that the excised stuff must have been honestly written for inclusion. I have found that when, to save trouble, I 'wrote short' ab initio much salt went out of the work."

OR if these words—"It was necessary that every word should tell, carry, weigh, taste—and, if need were, smell"—are but the echo of any school rhetoric, then consider, and consider twice, this item of technique. It was his wont, in moments of that dull, unadventuring stickiness that all writers know, to ask himself aloud before his mother or father: "What am I trying to get at?" Do not smile at the simplicity. On the day he bogged over a line in a poem called "The English Flag," it was his mother who popped out: "You're trying to say: 'What do they know of England who only England know.'" The method has merit beyond the presence of Mrs. Kipling, ar.

The next topic is to be approached guardedly. Understand, please, that Kipling was no mentalist-spiritualist-supernaturalist. To be sure, he thought himself sensitive to the "Feng-shui"—the in-dwelling spirit of the house. He quickly moved from a house where it was malign; where it was good, at Bateman's, he stayed his lifetime. But for the clairvoyance and its cluster of isms he had only repugnance. "I have seen too much evil and sorrow and wreck of good minds on the road to Endor to take one step along that perilous track."

And still, there is his Daemon. He speaks of it familiarly, confidently, with perfect acceptance; the thing, whatever it was, was in him and guided him in the true path.

Again and again the note: The Daemon had come to him first when he was writing "The Phantom Rickshaw" and it had said, "Take this notion and no other," and adds Kipling, "I obeyed, and was rewarded . . . It was my first serious attempt to think in another man's skin." Who could he have thought that other man to be? The goose-pimples rise on the skin.

WELL, we must take no step toward Endor. Kipling, it is plain, was fond of large, high conceptions; he is a Hebrew prophet among writers. If he chose to express the quiescence of a writer's hard-earned skill, which is instant selection and knowledge of the way by the notion of the Daemon, then the lesser of us must remember that the accent lies on the skill and the earning. Minds without ballast need mistake no mere garbure for that skill. One evening with Gertrude Stein she made the point well. "Just when you are delighted with your own eloquence"—Miss Stein does not talk Steinian—"and everything flows wonderfully, just then is when you must distrust yourself the most." It is not good, one sees, that amateurs should speak of the Daemon.

A curiosity of our time is the fact that so few writers have come into their estate by studying writing. The less the others, let it be said at once. Consider the dossiers of our more chromium figures, printed with such pride. Even a single man will have been soda-jerk, cowboy, oil-truck driver, salesman for an undertaker, accountant, vaudeville actor and private detective, and to believe the publishers' blurbs, not the simple and usual necessity of money lies therein but a special, magnanimous virtue for his art. It is refreshing, then, to recall Kipling.

Of course he was a genius. Of course he was famous and sought after before he was 24, and his writing income needed no eking out. And of course it is too hard and rigorous a theory that would have our books come thus only from the Chosen.

Yet in discussions of the way to write, in those exhortations: "How do you know you can't write?" and such-like flabby leverings of fate, I have seldom seen this clear hint from Kipling taken up. There is only a great shout, "Write about what you know," with the implication that when you have had a dozen astonishingly diverse jobs in a year, or trekked over half the tours listed by Messrs. Cook, you will know a great deal. And it all ignores the core of the matter, that writing is secret and imaginative and wholly inside, first, last and always. Kipling knew. He says—the allusion does not concern us here—"It was pure snobism on my part, but it served to keep me inside myself; which is what snobbery is for."

WHAT, you ask, of the mass of vocational, technical, day-light lore a writer must possess, and that Kipling seemed to ooze with in every joint? The answer is simple—you mugg up all that by heart. Kipling, at 17, became a member of a men's club in Lahore where engineer and army officer and civil servant sat cheek by jowl and talked the oil out of the lamps. He listened with both ears, yet took no notes but names and dates; if he didn't remember, it wasn't worth keeping anyway. Then his stories sponged all that up, and then his club-mates fell upon what he wrote and tore its wordly inaccuracies limb from limb. Which was beneficial. And that, all the way up the electric ladder to a side-table at the Athenaeum, was the whole of the Kipling method.

If in writing "Captains Courageous" he visited Boston Harbor, and saw how a cod is cut up, and went out one sea-sick day in a pollock-fisher, and if he had a railroad magnate devise him a schedule of how a special train would cross the continent at top speed, well, in a Kipling-esque phrase, that was just the Higher Mugging.

You remember '07, his excellent tale of railroad locomotives, full of the jore of round-house and engine crew. Do you imagine that Kipling worked on a railroad, or so much as donned overalls and goggles and got himself a pass to ride 300 miles in the cab of a 4-4-2 Atlantic? Not a bit. He had—the tale is not in this book—the pleasure of telling Charles Scribner, to whom he sold the story for $1,000, that he had gained all the necessary details from a 25-cent, second-hand Scribner book picked up off a stall—with a consequent profit of 399,999 per cent. That sort of thing takes writing, you will grant, but after all what are writers for?

has been approached on his plan to increase the court by one justice a year, following resignation of judges over 70. Figuring also in the discussions is a substitute plan by Senator Charles C. Andrews (Democrat), Florida, to enlarge the court permanently to 11, with each of the 10 judicial circuits represented.

Hatch, said yesterday he is now revising his compromise, with a view to achieving the "new blood" objectives of the President, and still meeting most of the committee objections.

Although not formally talking "filibuster," leading court plan opponents said they intend, and have the strength, to speak indefinitely on the court bill.

"It is not a filibuster, when more than 40 Senators have speeches and still want to make," one of their number commented.

Formation of a "steering committee" to direct the fight will be considered at an opposition strategy conference this morning.

Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, who has closely collaborated with the liberal Senator Wheeler in directing opposition strategy in the past, is expected to nominate the Montana for the proposed policy committee chairmanship.

The conference also will determine the number of Senators on the policy group, which probably will be kept to from 3 to 5 members.

Whether it will be bi-partisan in character, with Republicans as well as Democrats represented, must also be decided.

Lady Nancy Astor In Charlottesville To Visit Brother

Charlottesville, Va., June 15 (AP)—Lady Nancy Astor, American-born member of the British Parliament, arrived in Charlottesville today to visit her brother, Col. W. H. (Buck) Langhorne, who is a patient at the Blue Ridge Sanatorium.

Arriving at the sanatorium about 11:30 this morning, Lady Astor went immediately to her brother's room and the pair chatted gaily until noon, the end of the visiting hour.

Lady Astor while here is visiting Col. Langhorne's wife at Greenfield, Warren, in Albemarle County. Col. Langhorne is reported to be improving.

Silver Hill Youth Dies Of Auto Crash Injuries

Charles Vinton Middleton, 18, of Silver Hill, Md., died at Gallinger Hospital last night of injuries suffered in an automobile accident earlier in the evening.

According to police, Middleton was the only occupant of his car when it crashed against a telephone pole about 3 miles south of Silver Hill on route 5. He suffered a fractured skull, fractured leg, multiple lacerations about the head and internal injuries.

U. S. 4-H Clubs Gather in D. C. Encampment

200 Members, 80 Leaders From All States Assemble Here.

The eleventh national encampment of 4-H Club boys and girls will be opened tonight with a program at camp grounds on the south side of the Washington Monument.

Approximately 200 members and 80 leaders will be in attendance, representing every State in the Union. Assemblies will be held in the auditorium of the South Building, United States Department of Agriculture.

"Traditions, Objectives and Plans of the Camp" will be discussed tonight by George E. Farrell, camp director. Greetings will be extended by Dr. C. W. Barbour, of the Extension Service. Miss Ella Gardner will direct camp singing.

The encampment will last through June 23 and be marked by supervised visits to Government buildings, national shrines and other nearby points of interest.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace will address the group tomorrow morning. M. L. Wilson, U. S. Department of Agriculture, will also speak.

Other addresses will be made during the week by W. L. Darrow, W. J. Jernigan, C. E. Potter, C. B. Wedleigh, I. T. Bode, Miss Dorothy Emerson, Dr. P. J. Kruse, Miss Beulah M. Rodgers, Miss Julia Newton, Miss Minnie Fisher Cunningham, Mrs. Harriet J. Johnson, M. G. White, Miss Gertrude L. Warren, Dr. Allen Stockdale, Eugene Merritt, C. A. Sheffield, Edward D. Rowan, Miss Madge J. Reese, T. A. Erickson, R. M. Evans, W. J. Jernigan, Miss Anita Burnham, C. W. Ferguson, Senator Ellison D. Smith and R. A. Turner.

Soviet North Pole Camp (By Radio to Moscow), June 15 (AP)—The sky was overcast today and visibility reduced by a mist to about one mile. The ceiling was approximately 300 yards and the temperature 21.2 degrees above zero.

According to police, Middleton was the only occupant of his car when it crashed against a telephone pole about 3 miles south of Silver Hill on route 5. He suffered a fractured skull, fractured leg, multiple lacerations about the head and internal injuries.

Hull Picks Dunn To Head Merged European Divisions

Another step in the reorganization of the State Department was taken yesterday with announcement by Secretary Hull of the combining of the Division of Western European Affairs and the Division of Eastern European Affairs into a single Division of European Affairs.

Also created was a new Division of Near Eastern Affairs, replacing the old division, with an altered sphere of jurisdiction.

The European division will be headed by James Clement Dunn as chief. He has been head of the Western European office, Assistant Secretary, since 1933.

Wallace Murray will continue as chief of the Near East division, with Paul Ailing and Maynard B. Barnes as assistants.

Robert F. Kelley, who was chief of the Eastern European division, will become first secretary of the embassy at Istanbul, Turkey.

1939 Bridge Contest Is Awarded to U.S.

Budapest, June 15 (AP)—The 1939 world bridge championships were awarded to the United States tonight at a meeting of the superior council of the International Bridge League for Europe. The council also adopted the American duplicate bridge laws, in a simplified form.

The New York men's team, headed by Ely Culbertson, led a Norwegian team by 900 points in standing hands compiled after from 36 to 72 hands had been played in the first "knockout" round of international competition. Eight teams survived preliminary play to enter the "knockout" round.

In women's competition an English team defeated a group of American women by only 3 points, a margin so close the match was counted a tie. Another team of American women was beaten by an Egyptian team by 29 points.

Nazi Sea Strength in Maneuvers

The Post is the only daily morning paper in Washington with A. P. WIREPHOTO Service.

"MYSTERY SLAYING" JUST TARGET PRACTICE. Lawrence Million, 18, of New York, tested his rifle last Sunday night, police said he confessed yesterday, by shooting out lights on a theater marquee 1,200 feet away. Mrs. Dorothy Carlucci stepped out of the theater and fell with a bullet in her heart. Million (right) said he knew of the fatal shot but was too frightened to report.

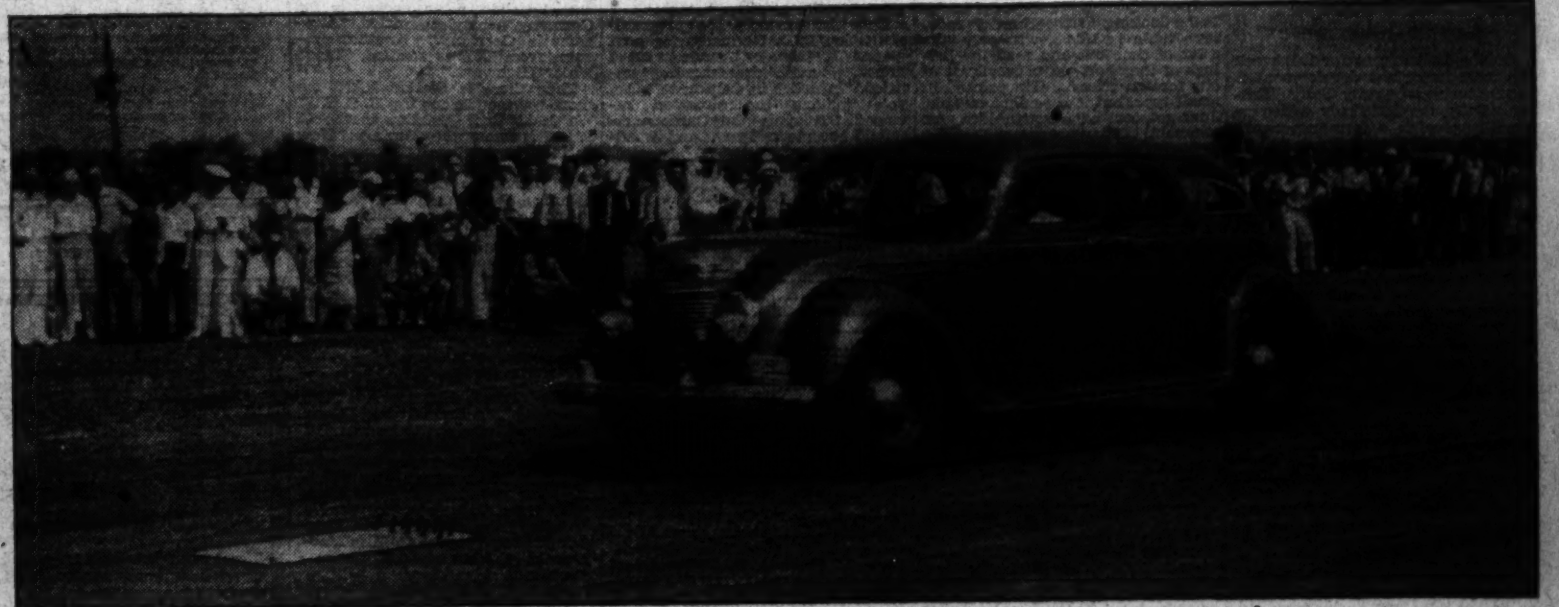

OFF HELGOLAND ISLAND. Germany's power on the sea was paraded before members of the Nazi "Strength for Joy" society. Top photo shows three mine sweepers executing a maneuver, and below a mine sweeper traveling full speed in a heavy sea.

OLDEST 'VET' DANCES JIG. When the band struck up "Dixie" at the Confederate reunion at Jackson, Miss., Ransom Simmons, 104-year-old former slave, couldn't keep from breaking into a jig. Simmons served as personal servant to Wade Hampton when he was a general in the Civil War and also when he was Governor of South Carolina.

MEDAL WINNER. William Lord Drake, Milwaukee high school boy, receiving from President Roosevelt the $500 prize offered by the Gorgas Memorial Institute for his winning essay on "The Importance of Mosquito Control and the Gorgas Memorial."

AT 80 MILES AN HOUR. This car was driven over a row of steel railroad spikes to demonstrate a "non-blowout" safety tube perfected by the Goodyear Co. District officials witnessed the demonstration at Washington Airport.

WHITE MEN PERPETUATE INDIAN RITES. These realistic snake dancers are members of the Snokis, an organization of white business men of Prescott, Ariz., who perpetuate the customs of Indians by re-enacting their snake dances yearly. They are shown in their 17th annual ceremony. The snakes are alive, but just harmless bull snakes.

"HOW TO UNDRRESS" brings legal difficulties to Elaine Barrie Barrymore. Three shots from the motion picture short "How to Undress Before Your Husband," in which the divorced wife of John Barrymore had the principal role. Duane Esper, producer, and Elaine Barrie were sued by E. K. Nadel, seeking an injunction against use of the title.

The Nightingale Opens Tonight In Alexandria

Night Club Will Have Ralph Garren as Orchestra Leader.

By Chanticleer

The Nightingale night club is all set for its grand opening tonight. Located 3 miles the other side of Alexandria on the Richmond highway, the management promises that no efforts have been spared to assure all those who take the short drive to this haven the best of the best of evenings.

The minimum is $1 per person per night. Fair enough. The dance floor is said to be 1,000 square feet in area. Which should be large enough to accommodate the crowds which are sure to be on hand. The menu offers specialties chicken and sea food. Good music is assured in the name of Ralph Garren, who has done quite a bit of playing in clubs in Washington. And the floor show. A de luxe show which will play twice nightly will include recent Broadway entertainers and local talent.

We offer our best congratulations to the manager and host of Washington's newest addition and we're sure the Washington patrons will say ditto. Your host is Ellsworth Nightingale.

They call themselves the three M's. Don't ask what the M indicates but we have a suspicion that it stands for merrymakers. They are the latest in night club entertainment and can be heard each night of the week at the Ambassador's Hi-Hat Cocktail Lounge. The three boys, whose names are Jack Noel, James Summerville and Rudy Ferris, make music with a piano, saxophone and guitar, respectively.

The three M's have been tripping for the past 15 years, which, come to think of it, is a long, long time. They have been featured on many radio shows and just recently finished an engagement with a musical show on Broadway. Rudy can't get over the movie shorts the boys made for Fox Film Co. and if you give him the chance he'll tell you all about it.

The Hi-Hat is air conditioned and a comfortable atmosphere prevails at all hours of the day. The boys, whose pictures grace this page, will play your requests as they journey from table to table.

The Washington Hotel announces the opening of the Roof Deck. The Deck is a cocktail and dining lounge. Floyd E. Rush, manager of the downtown house, says that luncheon, afternoon cocktails, dinner and late supper are on the menu. The lounge is a unique rooftop terrace where you can enjoy close-up views of points of interest around Washington through a long-range telescope, especially provided for the guests. Like it? We do.

Sally Winston at Lotus.
On the Lotus front for this week the most important development is the featuring of pretty Sally Winston. Sally, the little lady with personality plus, is a former network performer. Her specialty is "blues numbers." With Miss Winston is Blanche Ray in a high-kick and novelty count number.

A team that does everything from a waltz fox-trot to a swing fox-trot, in the persons of Donald and Drama, capture the fantasies of the Lotus followers. Al Norton's galaxies continue their eccentric dancing and will introduce a new rhythm routine tonight. Completing the bill, Alice Mack offers a fast acrobatic act that is worth noting. There are three shows daily and Bill Strickland is at the orchestral helm.

Here's a story that needs telling. It concerns a bus boy at the Mayfair Cafe. The title is "The Rapid Rise of Paul" or "Speech was Golden in this Case." The other evening a gentleman guest, alone, was having his nightly drink. He had no place to go and so he remained for another. Pretty soon it got to be closing time and the gentleman found himself closing the spot for the night. In fact, on his way out, he was a step or two behind our young hero (busboy). As they proceeded up the steps to the Mayfair to the pavement, the busboy started to hum a tune to himself, but not that low that our friend could not hear.

Upon reaching the ground floor the man stopped the busboy asking him for his name, address, etc., and telling the young man that his voice had "something." Now, the boy is on his way to Boston where he will sing with a certain well-known band. You see, the gentleman was none other than Guy Lombardo's attorney.

If you visit the Shoreham veranda these days don't fail to order a frozen daquiri. It really tastes better than it sounds. The drink is shaken and the ice is left floating in the concoction and it forms a soft custardy delight.

While you crunch on the frozen daquiri, Ida Clarke grinds rhythm out of the Hammond organ that will have you beating a rat-a-tat under the little tables on the porch. The porch is open from 12 noon 'till 2 a. m.

Just goes to show it takes marriage to cause a violinist to play inspired music. Over at the Carlton's main dining room, Harry Cherkassy, who plays luncheon and dinner music, is playing in the fashion. Harry was married last Saturday and the only things he wants to play are romantic melodies.

Finelli Plays The Cello.
Let you in on a secret. Anthony Finelli, who fiddles with the band at the Wardman Park Hotel's Melrose Room, plays a cello, too. He played with our own National Symphony Orchestra and several years ago was first cello player with the Detroit Symphony. His violin solo of the Bolero is well worth hearing—especially with Jimmie's Santmeyer's piano accompaniment. So now you know.

Here are the names of the members of the new band at Brinkley's. This is in response to numerous requests for the information. They are "Happy" Bright, Bob Sussman and Carl Gunther. The last of the three is the leader.

The married artist at the Madison is doing a splendid job with his drawings of the guests. (From our copy) He goes from table to table. Our informant also tells us that Johnny Shaw, the leader of the band, is down in the dumps, of the reason... little Helen Shaw won't stop more than two hours in each group... don't do anything! Just a couple bulletin; many past

Mother of Eight Goes on Trial as Husband Slayer

Says Spouse Bought Liquor With Christmas Food Money, Then Beat Her.

Mrs. Frances N. Kellison, 38-year-old mother of eight children, went on trial in District Court yesterday on a first-degree murder indictment charging her with the slaying of her youthful husband the day after Christmas, 1936. A jury of eight women and four men is expected to have the case placed in its hands today.

Sobbing intermittently, Mrs. Kellison, in testifying yesterday, said her husband, John Kellison, 26, often beat her in drunken rages. The day before Christmas, she stated, he took all her money to purchase liquor. She said the day after Christmas she was standing near the corner of Eleventh and N streets northwest when her husband passed. As she sought to enter her apartment he pushed her, and in attempting to defend herself from further physical punishment, she shot him.

Two of her older children, Bessie, 12, and Frances, 14, testified they often saw their stepfather beat their mother when she was intoxicated. They said they were with their mother when she last encountered Kellison, but fled immediately.

Mrs. Kellison said her husband gave her $2 to purchase Christmas food, but later took the money and bought liquor. She said the family was almost without food on Christmas. Testimony was completed yesterday and the case is expected to reach the jury this afternoon.

Wright Brothers' Busts Completed

Bronze busts of Orville and Wilbur Wright, pioneer American aviators, were placed in the rotunda of the Army Aeronautical Museum yesterday. Produced under the Treasury art project, the busts are the work of the sculptor, Seth Velsky, who made the plaster cast of Wilbur Wright, who died in 1912. From Photographs supplied by Orville Wright was made from personal studies.

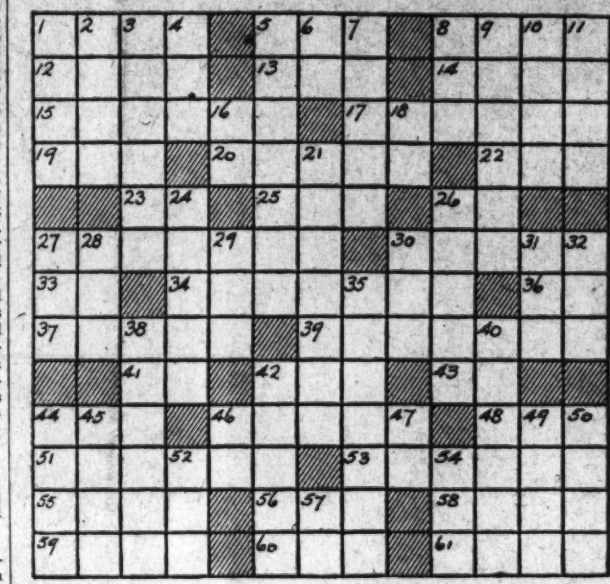

The project, which was conceived before the completion of the Army Aeronautical Museum in 1935, was not started until last year. The sculptor was a pupil of Aldin Polasek and Lorado Taft.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

'It's the More Mature Persons Who Have the Money,' Says Woman Irked by Dearth of Size 18 Gowns.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I hope every women's clothing store buyer in Washington reads "Miss Fit's" letter in your column of June 8—and now I want to add something to it. I am still young and unlike her, who requires size 40, I take only size 18. Yet I find much less choice and much less chic in my size than in the 14's and 16's. Why all this exclusive catering to immaturity? In one store yesterday I found that if one wanted anything larger than 14 or 16 one had to look for it in the basement!

So much "accent on youth" these days is a joke on poor youth, who will soon be shoved aside for never youth. I wonder if they realize it? Who are these stylists who dictate to us like some silent Mussolini about what we shall and shall not wear? For instance, I do not look well in high necks or saucer shaped hats—yet try and find anything else! After visiting nine hat shops one hot day recently I finally found one hat that would hold more than a cupful.

Even though your column has run so much to love problems recently I trust you will find space for this wail of mine. And I trust, also, that the buyers don't think we are ready to fold up and fade out because we have progressed beyond a 14 or 16 dress size. They should at least be reminded that it's the more mature persons who have the money. All these youngsters have is what they pry loose from their parents.

PETER PAN.

Many in Same Boat.

DEAR PETER PAN: In answering "Miss Fit's" letter I suggested that you do not recall, that she hold consultations with some of the department store stylists in Washington, saying, "You can get the names of these experts and the stores which employ them from Miss Ethel Ehlen, The Post's fashion editor." Promptly thereafter, Miss Ehlen received a number of letters and telephone calls asking for such information. This, of course, is ample evidence that you and "Miss Fit" are not alone in your quandary as to where to find garments which flatter the mature figure.

M. H.

Fortune-Teller's Query?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a woman of 59. About 24 years ago, while traveling in Europe, I met a woman who was a tea leaf reader. She was very well known and loved. She lived in a beautiful, old-fashioned mansion in a wonderful, old-fashioned garden. I became interested in her work and studied with her. She told me I was unusually gifted and should become a professional. Afterward, I did a great deal of reading for charity affairs, such as bazaar and parties, but never for pay. Now, however, certain financial difficulties oblige me to think of making a living.

Miss Haworth, do you think I could use this knowledge as a means of support? I am refined, have a good personality, no encumbrances and am free to travel. I am sure if someone would employ me in a tea room or garden I would be profitable to them. Thanking you, I am

"THE FUTURE."

DEAR "T. F.": There are few women who haven't succumbed, at one time or another, to the temptation to have their "fortunes" read. Many women, indeed, are devotees of this pastime. Whoever doubts my statement should drop into any tea room or restaurant which uses such a feature as a drawing card, and observe the tables full of women eagerly anticipating their turn at gazing into the keyhole of the future, so to speak. This being true, it is entirely possible you might be able to support yourself by reading tea leaves for pay.

Tomorrow's Problem
Is a mother justified in beating her 20-year-old daughter with a hairbrush for sly disobedience? Girl, thus punished, and "so bruised she couldn't walk the next day," asks the question. It will be answered here tomorrow.

rant which uses such a feature as a drawing card, and observe the tables full of women eagerly anticipating their turn at gazing into the keyhole of the future, so to speak. This being true, it is entirely possible you might be able to support yourself by reading tea leaves for pay.

Why don't you make the rounds of better-class, slightly out-of-the-way eating places in Washington and sell some restaurant or other on the idea that he (or she) could attract more customers with such a feature? Your refined, the authority of your years, your background of travel and interesting contacts and your vast experience as an amateur entertainer in this field, should preeminently fit you for pleasing susceptible-minded clients.

Incidentally, the fact that you find it necessary to ask me what the future holds for you isn't a very good advertisement of your presumable prophetic powers.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Circles of Cellophane Preserve Jam, Jelly

A new aid in preserving jellies and jams is an improved type of cellophane which fits over the top of the jars and holds them air-tight. The seals are now moisture-proofed, making them still more efficient in preventing evaporation of liquids and keeping acids from absorbing outside moisture. After the glasses are filled with jelly, the circular pieces are dampened, pressed over the tops of the jars and secured with rubber bands. When dry, the seals cling tight to the glass so no air or moisture can enter. No other cover is required.

Zeal for Cause Ranks Above Personality In Attaining Political Success, Says Leader

Despite her busy life as a national political leader, Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister's main interest centers about her family. She is shown above in the garden of her Georgetown home with her two daughters, Claire Raiguel, left, and Mary Wonderly.

Mrs. McAllister Sees New Type of Party Worker.

By Malvina Lindsay.

FOR FEMININE SUCCESS in politics, Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, typical example of the modern, younger leader in this field, gives a very old prescription—the philosophy of "he that loseth his life shall gain it."

A man may become a successful politician, even a statesman, while leaving his eye trained on a country, judiciously or a seat in Congress, admits Mrs. McAllister, the new and dynamic director of the women's division of the Democratic National Committee. But a woman, she points out, will rally and hold other women only by being able with a cause that supersedes self.

"This may seem paradoxical," she said, "but I really believe that a woman gets further in politics the more selfless she is in her ambition."

Unusual philosophy this at a time when modistes, cosmeticians, psychologists, voice culturists are crying on every hand that clothes, looks, diction, personality are 85 per cent of success in any business or profession.

Personality Has Place.

"Oh, I'm not saying that personality doesn't have a place in politics," went on the vivid, alert young matron who sat behind the impressive big desk at Democratic headquarters. "You got to have the ability to make a good impression and retain confidence. But the big thing is to have knowledge and faith—to know your cause and to believe in it."

Women are particularly quick, Mrs. McAllister believes, to sense whether or not their leaders are sincere and unselfishly enthusiastic for a program or merely looking for self-aggrandizement. One reason for this may be woman's natural intuition. Another may be the fact that women rally best to the social and humanitarian side of a political program. And to lead such a cause a woman must "come into court with hands clean."

Even successful campaign oratory, Mrs. McAllister maintains, is based on the formula of deep faith and conviction. "People don't want to listen to political bombast and meaningless phrases any more," she said. "They want accurate information. The best preparation a woman can make for political speaking is to know her facts. If she knows what she is talking about and feels it deeply, her oratory will largely take care of itself."

"Prima Donna" Fading.
Political prima donnas, amateur spellbinders, tea pourers in big floppy hats—these are passing from the feminine political scene as Mrs. McAllister sees it. Club and tea party methods are out. The political weapons of the day she defines as "education and organization." Education provides the motive power for the cause, she points out, and organization puts it across.

Mrs. McAllister is an example of her own political theories. With a background of Miss Maderia's School in Washington, four years at Bryn Mawr College, where her academic interest in government was kindled, the presidency of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Junior League, and active participation in civic and welfare work, she began her political career in the precinct kindergarten, "pounding pavements" to check up on registered voters. Her first active work was in the Al Smith campaign of 1928, and she campaigned again in 1932. For two years she was national committee woman for the Michigan Young Democrats, and was State director of the Reporter Plan of the women's division of the Democratic National Committee. She was a delegate at large to the 1936 Democratic Convention, and a member of the women's platform committee. On the retirement of James Wolfe, she was called to her present position. She has just now moved her family here to a house in Georgetown to be with her through an active summer. Judge McAllister, who recently was elected a member of Supreme Court of Michigan, will return home January 1 to take up his official duties. The two daughters, Mary Wonderly, 11, and Claire Raiguel, 7, will remain here.

At present Mrs. McAllister is dashing in and out of Washington as she attends regional conferences of Democratic women throughout the country. To them she is carrying the message of "study your Government." And that, she believes, is the most immediate duty today confronting every woman in the United States of every political faith—or none.

For the young woman coming along in college who is looking toward a political career, Mrs. McAllister sees constantly broadening opportunities. "Women have been given recognition in the Cabinet, in the diplomatic service, in all departments of Government, and they have made good," she said. "They are receiving greater recognition in the party councils. There is no sex in politics; it is a matter of human nature and ability."

"Yet, at the same time, the young woman wanting to serve her country politically must remember that she needs plenty of knowledge and training. In politics and Government she still has the burden of proof upon her. She still must be twice as good as a man."

"A woman President? Well, perhaps in time, but I do not believe public opinion is quite ready for it. But women have already proved their capability as rulers—Elizabeth, Victoria and, in her own time, Wilhelmina. No doubt, they will prove it again, perhaps in this country."

By Alice Hughes.

The Modern Woman Menace!
GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Last week-end Grace Moore visited Lily Pons up at Silvermine, Conn., and the two pretty and costly canaries had a fine time gabbling and cooing their high c's. As a memento of the visit Grace sent Lily a young blue spruce tree for the estate. Pons, thrilled, got a small bronze plate for it with Moore's name and the date—thus beginning what she calls her "Autograph Grove." And which well might start a national fancy.

The barman around town, I find, have been trying out this "Wallis Cocktail" which the Duke of Windsor is said to have shaken up in honor of his booted bride—and I am sorry to say that most of them tell me it is, in their own word, "lousy."

It's a mixture of cointreau, gin, peppermint, lemon juice, soda and ice. My friend Nick, of the St. Moritz, says the peppermint puts the cuss on the tripple—and without it the drink would be a mere "sidecar," that is, but sinister drink vented during prohibition to tickle feminine palates. Oh, well; Try Again Eddie, old Bridgemoor!

SUE has a small budget and a grand time. She never turns down an invitation because she has "nothing to wear." She plans all her wardrobe at one time, looks smart the summer long.

To avoid buying a lot of accessories, Sue keeps her clothes to one basic color each season. Navy's smart for early spring and looks cool, too, with mid-summer pastels. So she chose handbag, gabardine pumps and hats that tailored, but wide enough for a touch of formality— all in navy. For business, movies, week-ends she selected a cadet blue printed jacket dress. Or she might have chosen a royal blue, carmelian, ginger, rose or green dress. Any of these colors goes well with navy. For daytime heat she got a three-

Cooling, inexpensive, and easy to prepare despite its regal name, is the newest summer beverage that is being served by discriminating socialites, regardless of ancestral background. In honor of the British festival period it has been called coronation cup, and it really is good enough to please a king.

Coronation cup has tea for its base and spices to give it the luxury of extra flavor. Into a china teapot place two level teaspoons of tea for every portion to be made. Also put in six whole cloves and one small piece of stick cinnamon for each portion. Pour over this furiously boiling water—one level cup to each serving. Let this brew steep no longer than five minutes, then pour it through a strainer into tall glasses half-filled with cracked ice. A slice of lemon may be added for garnish. Sweeten to taste.

Day Tuttle Quits Theater To Enter Cinema Field

Director of Civic Enterprise Will Not Return to Washington When His Summer's Work Is Completed.

By Hope Ridings Miller,

The Post Society Editor.

Rumor is going around that the Day Tuttle, popular additions to the Capital's social and drama circles last winter, will not be back next fall. Reliable sources report that the director of the Washington Civic Theater, his wife and four children, eventually may make their home in Hollywood, and that as soon as the two summer theaters with which he is connected in Mount Kisco and White Plains, N. Y., complete this season's work, he will join a cinema company.

Whether his work will be centered in Hollywood or New York at first has not yet been divulged, but it is understood that, come next fall, he will be a full-fledged member of the film profession, probably in a directorial capacity.

Last September, Day Tuttle and his family came to the Capital and moved into the red brick house in Georgetown belonging to Col. and Mrs. Edward Sturdevant, who had gone abroad to spend the winter. The Washington Civic Theater had just been born—an infant of the combined enthusiasm and foresight of two groups, the Columbia Players and the Drama Guild, working in co-operation with the Junior Board of Commerce.

Civic Theater Asset

To Capital's Social Life.

The enterprising board of governors were faced with a double job—to sell the idea of a civic theater to Washington, and to put across a director whose name and fame were little known in the Capital. They did both. And well. They made the project a financial success, and they insured its position as a social as well as a drama asset to Washington life.

An indication of its accomplishment is found in the current issue of Stage Magazine, which awards one of its "palms" to the Washington Civic Theater "for becoming in one year one of our best community theaters." Five other groups—each of which has been established a number of years—are also awarded "palms."

But back to Day Tuttle. Washingtonians will miss him and his attractive wife. In one brief winter here they built up a wide acquaintance. Their Sunday afternoon teas in the book-lined upstairs library of the Sturdevant home were parties their guests will remember with keenest pleasure. A playwright and actor, as well as a director, Mr. Tuttle had a wide range of interests and a charming personality. Mrs. Tuttle, a Vassar graduate with a Phi Beta Kappa key and an exceptional sense of humor, was as popular as her personable husband in circles in which they moved.

There's no doubt about it, Day Tuttle did a lot to launch the Civic Theater. And "The Civic"—as many members term it—also helped Day Tuttle. His offer from the film company doubtless stemmed from the success of his work in the Nation's Capital. Furthermore, it goes without saying that now the Civic Theater is off to such a good start, its future is not dependent upon the going or coming of any one man.

Scores of Applicants

Seek Job With Civic Project.

Last spring, between productions, when Mr. Tuttle took a flying trip to Hollywood, some Washingtonians believed he was toying with a contract from Filmland. Later, it was learned he had also received an offer from another community theater, and that there was possibility he would not spend a second season in the Capital.

Since it has become known, definitely that he will not return, the board of governors of the Civic Theater has been deluged with applications from outstanding directors eager to become associated with the Capital's up and coming drama project. If the man who now rates highest in the opinion of the board is finally signed for the coming season, he will probably be every bit as much a favorite in Washington society, every bit as much a success as a director, as Day Tuttle was. But no matter who is given the job, it is safe to say Washington's Civic Theater is here to stay—an enterprising and important part of the Capital's social, as well as civic life.

'Capital Kaleidoscope,' Mrs. Keyes' Book, Tells of Parties at Which Coolidges Served Ice Water—and of Other More Elaborate Affairs.

By Dudley Harmon.

EXCEPT FOR THE PEOPLE who play the leading roles, Washington society doesn't seem to have changed much in the fifteen years since 1921. Visiting dignitaries are still tendered dinners as staggering as they were in Harding's time, and the newly arrived Representative's wife still makes the same strenuous round of calls (notwithstanding the disapproval of Hamilton Fish).

This impression stands out after a reading of "Capital Kaleidoscope," a volume of happy reminiscences by Frances Parkinson Keyes, wife of former Senator Henry Wilder Keyes, of New Hampshire, and published yesterday. Her other books range from historical novels to a biography of St. Theresa written last summer in a French convent at Lisieux.

Mrs. Keyes went to her first White House party at the age of 7, and has been going to parties here, off and on, ever since. To this first affair she wore a pink cashmere dress trimmed with velvet ribbon and lace, but no hat, so that some of the other guests thought she must be one of the McKee children—President Harrison's little granddaughters. "For a few moments," the author says, "I basked in the glory of a great impersonation. Then the host was discovered—and she was led away in disgrace."

Regatta Group Planning Cruise

Country Fair Arranged for Trip Down River Tuesday Night.

A BEVY OF attractive girls, attired in sun bonnets and aprons, will greet the scores of persons who will participate in the cruise next Tuesday sponsored by the President's Cup Regatta Association for the 1937 regatta fund. A number of outstanding men and women will assist in receiving the guests.

Mr. and Mrs. John A. Remon will head the line of hosts and hostesses on the wharf and on the gangplank, assisted by other members of the official board of the regatta association and their wives. The "regatta girls" will include Dorothy Gould Fowler, Lillian Willett, Mary Katherine Bentley, Ann Thompson, Alice Clark, Mary Tyler McCormick and Polly Wigram.

Many dinner parties will be given prior to the sailing of the S. S. Potomac, which will make the cruise. The cruise is known as the Gold Cup Country Fair.

Among those who will entertain guests on the cruise are Mr. and Mrs. J. George Wenzel, Dr. and Mrs. R. Lyman Sexton, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Connelley, Dr. and Mrs. C. Bache Gill, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Somerville, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Talbot, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ingling, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Shelton, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Lodge and Admiral and Mrs. H. G. Hamlet.

Dancing on the main deck of the Potomac and the upper deck, with refreshments nearby will be outstanding attractions in addition to the country fair features which will occupy the entire salon deck.

Judging from interest already being shown, this will be the most popular cruise ever planned by the sponsor's committee. The idea of a floating Country Fair seems to appeal to local yachtsmen and their friends. Many persons also are planning to come from nearby cities as special guests.

The sponsor's committee also has arranged for a full moon on this trip—a moon to be lighted on the salon deck by a means of multi-colored illumination, showing up the decorations of the improvised side-show tent that will shelter a number of "treasures," as well as stunts planned for the cruise by Mr. William E. Huntington.

Virginia Rinaldi To Be Wed in Fall

The engagement of Miss Virginia Loretta Rinaldi, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Rinaldi, of 5110 Park Mills, Md., to Mr. J. Stanley Russell, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Stanley Russell, of North Beach, Md., is announced. The wedding will take place in the fall.

Miss Rinaldi and Mr. Russell are both graduates of Washington Tech. The bride-elect's sister is Mrs. Alphonse Leemans, the former Miss Theodora Rinaldi, who was married to the famous football player last Saturday.

More Lavish Parties Than Coolidges Recalled.

Other and more lavish parties which linger in her memory are the ball given by the former President of Panama and Senora de Alfaro for their daughter Amelita, now Mrs. Frank Weller; a dinner given by a one-time German Ambassador to the late Baron von Malzan, which began with consommé Bruxelles and ended with creme frit au fromage; and a reception given by the former British Ambassador and Lady Geddes, a magnificent fete which was "crashed" by every social climber in Washington.

Beauty THROWS OFF ITS SHACKLES with ZOTOS Machineless Permanent

There has been a revolution in permanent waving. No longer need anyone be shackled to a hot, heavy machine. Today's smart women demand the comfort and the beauty of ZOTOS, the machineless permanent.

Complete Freedom—ZOTOS uses no machines, wires or electricity. There is nothing to pin you down if you want to walk about; nothing to stir you up if you want to relax. Tiny, featherlight pads, called Vapets, are folded around your hair. These pads automatically heat themselves and gently bathe each curl in clean, colorless vapor. ZOTOS is so mild that it is the ideal permanent for white, dyed or bleached hair.

Definitely Lasting—Naturally, a wave so gentle is more natural-looking. And it is definitely lasting. ZOTOS is endorsed by the GoodHousekeeping Bureau, was awarded the Prix d'Honneur and Prix d'Excellence in Paris. Make your appointment today at any ZOTOS-Licensed Beauty Shop.

'Toy Truck' Will Carry Playthings for Lending and Dolls For 'Adoption' by Poor Children of Washington's Alleys Miss Etta Mai Russell, of Church Federation, Is in Charge.

Program Is Sponsored to Aid Prevention of Delinquency.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,

The Post Staff Editor.

DOLLS FOR ADOPTION—Apply to the Toy Truck, Miss Etta Mai Russell in charge.

If you were a little girl living in Navy Place alley or one of the many other alleys which have not yet been transformed under Washington's slum clearance program, this would mean you could have a doll all your own this summer. The name of Miss Russell, juvenile court worker for the Federated Church Women, combined with that of a Toy Truck spells open sesame to toyland for little children whose parents' purse strings are tight because the purses are empty. It means they will have playthings to help them spend their time on hot summer afternoons even though they cannot go off to camp or have grass and trees on their playground.

The Toy Truck is Miss Russell's idea and a part of the year-around, city-wide program of the Federated Church Women to prevent delinquency. The plan of taking Christmas trees to Washington's alleys and presenting Christmas programs last winter, also was hers, carried out by the women who are always ready to promote what she suggests.

Each church took in alley some two, at Christmas time and since have continued their interest. They have given aid in various ways, organizing sewing and cooking classes for the mothers, taking mothers and children to health clinics and holding special services at the Easter season. They have provided boxes for windows and, at the end of the summer, prizes will be given for the best.

Conducted Story Hour For Alley Children.

Last summer, Miss Russell and other members of the organization, as well as members of the Washington Story League, of which Miss Ellen Dashiell is president, went to the slums to tell stories. Wherever there was a group of children playing, the tell-me-a-story lady stopped, as perhaps a packing box and told stories for wistful little listeners. At first they were shy. Gradually they would come nearer and, at the end, beg for more stories.

One wide-eyed child came to Miss Russell at the close of a story hour and, taking one of her hands in his two little ones, looked up at her and said: "When I first saw you I don't know who you were. I thought you were just a lady."

The Toy Truck project will begin in Navy place alley where Mrs. Roosevelt told the Christmas story. There are 75 children of all ages living down there. The "truck" in the beginning will be Miss Russell's. It will have boxes of all kinds to lend and dolls for adoption. The adoption plan was worked out because dolls, of course, are the children's children and it would break a small "mother's" heart to be obliged to give her "child" at the end of two weeks.

Miss Russell plans to give the doll to the young foster mother to care for during a six-week period. Every two weeks, when Toy Truck comes, the doll baby must be brought for inspection to prove it is having good care in a good home. If the care is satisfactory, it may be permanently adopted at the end of the probation period, when the little "mother" will receive a certificate showing the doll belongs to her.

Bible Class Gives 25 New Dressed Dolls.

As a beginning for the adoption department, Miss Mabel Thurston's Bible class of the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church has provided 25 new dolls, all dressed by hand. Other toys—bicycles, tricycles, educational games, balls and such playthings—will be loaned to the children for two weeks at a time. Cards, such as are provided by the public libraries, will be issued and children must return the toys in good condition in order to be eligible to continue as Toy Truck patrons.

Miss Russell, whose projects always have modest beginnings, but adequate support once their purpose is known, expects there will be many public spirited citizens who will contribute either new toys or funds to keep the Toy Truck rolling. The project will be extended to other alleys as fast as possible.

"All students of juvenile problems recognize the importance of play in the life of a child," said Miss Russell. "When you realize these children have only the alleys for their playgrounds and no means with which to amuse themselves during the idle months of summer, it is not surprising if they get into mischief. The Federated Church Women aid in caring for delinquent children, but their first interest is to correct conditions which contribute to delinquency."

Mrs. Frank A. Linzell, former president of the Chevy Chase Woman's Club, has taken over her duties as president of the Federated Church Women, succeeding Mrs. Eugene V. Pugh, who has left to reside in California. She and Miss Russell yesterday spent the entire day working out details of the toy truck plan and selecting toys to form a nucleus for its equipment. More will be bought as funds are available, and eventually a real truck may be used for transportation.

Mary Mason, who conducts the Woman's Forum over WRC, is giving time for a toy truck broadcast at 1:30 today when Miss Russell will talk on the project, and tomorrow when Mrs. Linzell will speak. Next week members of the committee will speak daily at the same hour.

The Council of Federated Church Women, with a membership of 4,000, is the only organization maintaining a juvenile court worker with offices in the juvenile court building. Mrs. Thomas J. Howerton is chairman of the committee in charge.

"Madame Chairman" . . .

By Suzanne.

Mrs. Daniel A. Reed, president of the Congressional Club, and Mrs. Richard Duncan, its program chairman, are busy conferring on plans for the coming season, which opens in January. Despite the fact Congress is still in session with no sign of adjournment, the club, composed of wives of members, and designed as a center for their social activities, has closed. Those who fixed the club season did not count on Congressional years with something like 265 days in them.

However, it it becomes practically certain there will be no escape from the Capitol this summer, there may be a few picnics or club breakfasts.

Just now the clubhouse on New Hampshire avenue is having a fire escape added, in compliance with the District fire regulations. It will be on the U street side, in a little jog in the flat-front building, which conceals it from the front. This is gratifying to those who naturally cherish the appearance of the structure and consider the addition of the outside ladder neither a thing of beauty nor a joy forever, no matter how necessary it may be.

Mrs. Reed, with Representative Reed and their daughter, Miss Ruth Reed, will drive this week-end to their home in Dunkirk, N. Y. to spend a few days. Mrs. Reed will not return with her parents to their apartment at the Roosevelt but will go to Chautauque to remain until Congress adjourns. Both she and her mother are musicians and, in other seasons, have studied piano in master classes conducted there. This summer, she expects to make her stay a vacation, with no scholarly strings attached.

Miss Reed, who was elected president on Inauguration Day, will serve for another year.

CONGRESSIONAL wives who are members of the Seventy-fourth club will have a luncheon today at the Brook Farm Tea House, closing the season for their work. Plans for it were made last week by the board at a luncheon given by Mrs. Paul R. Greener at her home in Chevy Chase. Mrs. Phil Ferguson has been taking reservations for the party.

MORE FESTIVITIES, marking the wind-up of the season for organizations, include the tea to be given today by Mrs. Elsie M. Lowry, president of the Roosevelt High School P. T. A., at her home, 800 Quintana place, for board members and chairmen of committees, with Mrs. Walter B. Fry, State president, as guest of honor, and the picnic to be given Friday by Mrs. Louise Finegan, retiring president of the Congress Heights P. T. A. Mrs. Finegan is entertaining at her home in Oxon Hill, Md., with the officers of the past year as guests. Mrs. Ira Marine, the new president, also will be there.

ZONTIANS, who are having their regular luncheon today, are turning their attention to the convention next week—June 24-26—at Niagara Falls. Winifred Burwell will represent the Washington club. It is a meeting of the Zonta International and delegates from Canada, Hawaii and Europe will attend. "More light and less heat" on controversial matters affecting the status of women will be the theme. Discussion of important issues having to do with woman's civic and economic privileges will occupy a major part of the business program under the direction of Dora E. Neun, Ph. D., of Rochester, N. Y., international president.

Marjorie Hillis, a former Zontian, author of "Live Alone and Like It," and Bertha Harding, of the Indianapolis Club, who wrote "The Phantom Crown" and "Golden Fleece," will be among the speakers.

The Buffalo Club, with headquarters in the Hotel Statler there, will have "open house" for the delegates all day Wednesday, and on June 26 a tea will be given there for the returning Zontians.

MRS. G. GURLEIGH MOULTON, of Baltimore, who is State editor for the Maryland State Society of the D. A. R., left yesterday for her summer home in Fryburg, Me., to be gone for the entire season.

Garden Fete Is Conducted For Alliance

Mrs. Henry F. Sawtelle Entertains Society of Housekeepers.

Mrs. Ellis Logan, Former President, Reviews Club Life.

MRS. HENRY FENNO SAWTELLE yesterday afternoon entertained members of the Housekeeping Alliance, of which she is president, at a business meeting and garden party at her home. The Alliance, one of the oldest clubs in Washington, was among the first to affiliate with the District Federation of Women's Clubs, but only this season became a member of the General Federation.

Mrs. Ellis Logan, a former president of the Alliance as well as one of the early presidents of the District Federation, was a guest and spoke briefly, telling something of the club-life of the Capital then and now.

There were also several members of the Excelsior Literary Club among the guests. Mrs. Sawtelle has twice been president of this group which two weeks ago celebrated its fiftieth anniversary.

Among the Excelsior members was Mrs. Mattie Ewing who read an original poem. Mrs. Frederick Newburgh gave a short talk as did Mrs. Howard Hodgkins, vice president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and Mrs. Willis, regent of the Mary Bartlett Chapter, of which Mrs. Sawtelle is a member.

Mrs. Willis told of the placing of the marker by the chapter a short time ago on the home of Mary Ball Washington which has been preserved at Sheldfield, Va.

Music for the afternoon was provided by Mrs. Amy Bastin, who sang, and Miss Mildred Dean, who accompanied her and also played several piano solos.

After the business meeting and program the guests went into the garden where tea was served.

Champ Clark's Widow, 82, Dies In New Orleans

Lived in D. C. 28 Years; Was Pioneer Woman Suffragist.

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, June 15.—Mrs. Champ Clark, 82, widow of the famous Democratic Speaker of the House, died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. James M. Thompson, today after a long illness.

Besides Mrs. Thompson, wife of the publisher of the New Orleans Item-Tribune, Mrs. Clark is survived by a son, Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri; a brother, George Bennett, and a sister, Mrs. Mary Herndon, of Fulton, Mo.

Her husband died March 2, 1921, just prior to the inauguration of President Harding. Until that year Mrs. Clark lived in Washington during the 28 years that her husband was a member of the House, and took a public interest in the cause of peace and woman suffrage.

Prominent Figure.

Mrs. Clark was a prominent figure in official Washington during her husband's 28 years in Congress. She was a constant companion of the late Speaker, handling much of his correspondence and frequently advising him on political decisions.

Forceful and picturesque in conversation, she often utilized her early training as a public speaker to address women's clubs. She and Speaker Clark went out in society constantly, her distinguished appearance setting her apart at a variety of official functions.

She was one of the founders of the Women's Congressional Club here, a member of the board of governors of the Jefferson Memorial Association, charged with preserving Jefferson's home at Monticello, and a member of the governing board of the McGuffey Memorial Association.

Descendant of Pioneers.

Mrs. Clark was descended from pioneer Kentucky settlers, the large and powerful Hamilton clan that came to Kentucky with Daniel Boone. She was related to former Lieut. Gov. Robert B. McCreary, former Gov. James Bennett McCreary, both of Kentucky.

She married Clark when he was a struggling but brilliant lawyer, on December 14, 1861. For some time she taught school at Pike College at Bowling Green, where the couple lived, to help the family finances.

When her husband first went to Congress, in 1892, she came here with him. Throughout the many years she spent in the Capital she kept house with the same thoroughness as she had as a bride back in Bowling Green. Mrs. Clark also continued her girlhood custom of writing poems and stories.

She was noted for her democratic, unpretentious manner. She was particularly fond of young people, and once narrowly escaped death on a boat trip during an electrical storm while chaperoning her daughter and a group of friends.

She continued in the church of her family, the old-school Presbyterian Church, while her husband was a member of the Disciples Church.

Two of their children, Champ, Jr., and Annie Hamilton, died in infancy. Mrs. Clark was a pioneer in the suffrage movement. She also joined her husband in the study of subjects dealing with American history. A student and authority on the life and times of Jefferson Davis, she was an early member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and a prominent member of a number of cultural and charitable organizations.

During most of her later years, Mrs. Clark lived at Honey Shuck, the Clark home at Bowling Green. There, with her friends, one of the finest libraries in the State and the memories of her career as the wife of the Speaker of the House, she watched the progress of her son, Senator Bennett Champ Clark.

Fields Sues Doctor; 'Hindered Recovery'

Riverside, Calif., June 15 (P).—The argument over whether a doctor helped or hindered W. C. Fields, big-nosed movie comedian, in his battle against pneumonia began in superior court today.

The physician, Dr. Jesse Citron, sued Fields for $12,000, claimed for services. Fields sued back, asking $25,000, contending Citron's treatment retarded his recovery. Dr. Citron testified today that Fields demanded constant medical attention when he was stricken last year.

Edith Maxwell Gets an Appeal, Freed on Bond

Leaves Jail to Visit Kin; Court Approves Right to Argue Sentence.

By the Associated Press.

Wise, Va., June 15.—A more cheerful Edith Maxwell went out to visit relatives at Pound, Va., the burden of an impending 20-year prison sentence somewhat lightened by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, which today agreed to her right to argue an appeal from a second conviction on a charge of murdering her miner father.

The supreme court, in session at Wytheville, granted the petition of Miss Maxwell's attorney, Charles Henry Smith, of Alexandria, for a writ of error and supersedeas. Date for hearing arguments was not set.

In another instance today courts acted favorably toward the slim brunette former school teacher. She had been relogged in the county jail here Saturday when one of the sureties in the $15,000 bond under which she had been free since last December asked to be relieved of his obligation. However, she was released again this afternoon when six bondsmen gave surety of $15,000 at a bail hearing before Judge Ezra T. Carter.

Among Bondsmen.

Bondsmen included Clay Robertson, of Pound, her brother-in-law, and an uncle, A. T. Dotson, of Richmond.

Miss Maxwell had been in the jail at Wise the past week-end after one of her four underwriters on her $15,000 bond had asked to be relieved of that responsibility.

Brother Seeks Freedom.

Her brother, Earl Maxwell, acted swiftly to secure a substitute bondsmen.

Maxwell, a blacksmith and a miner, died at his home at Pound, and the State charged that he died from blows on the head struck by his daughter.

At her first trial, which attracted national interest, the young woman pleaded self-defense, but was convicted by a jury which recommended imprisonment of 25 years. This verdict was overturned by the Virginia Supreme Court and a new trial was held.

Convicted Second Time.

At her second trial, the defense offered medical testimony in an effort to show that Maxwell died of natural causes, but Edith again was convicted, this time with the recommendation that her term be 20 years.

From this second verdict, she is now appealing. The comely brunette defendant moved to Chesterfield County, near Richmond, some months ago to establish a home with some members of her family. She served as a waitress in a Richmond restaurant for a brief period. Her mother, Mrs. Trigg Maxwell, was also indicted on similar charges, but has not yet been brought to trial. Commonwealth's Attorney

Fred Greaser said action in the case of Mrs. Maxwell would be held up pending the outcome of Edith's second appeal.

ONE Jacket helps ... but TWO Jackets guarantee FRESH cigarettes

What this extra jacket does for you

NOVEMBER, 1930... Double-Mellow OLD GOLDS were first to use a Cellophane wrapper as an added protection for cigarettes.

A good idea. So good that all other cigarette manufacturers adopted Cellophane, too. A good idea—but not good enough.

OCTOBER, 1935... Double-Mellow OLD GOLDS introduced the EXTRA jacket. Double Cellophane. Double wrapping. Insuring the American cigarette smoker—for the first time—truly FRESH cigarettes anywhere he buys them.

TODAY... The OLD GOLD weather-tight, climate-proof package is no longer a theory. That the EXTRA jacket actually does deliver FRESHNESS to the smoker has been proved day in and day out over a period of nearly two years. And proved in every kind of climate: hot, cold, dry or damp.

So the OLD GOLD smoker enjoys not only the luxury of the choicest prize crop tobaccos. Not only the celebrated OLD GOLD double-mellow blend obtained by exclusive Lorillard methods.

He enjoys these fine qualities at their best—at their top form. Because Double-Mellow OLD GOLDS are always FRESH, thanks to the EXTRA jacket.

Always FRESH. Never stale. Always wholesome. Never irritating. Always full-flavored. Never weather-weary and climate-worn.

You can't buy a stale OLD GOLD. The EXTRA jacket is your guarantee.

Getting Hit Gracefully
Was Once an Art.

By Shirley Povich.

The beaming of Mickey Cochrane three weeks ago created a new furore against vicious pitchers but your correspondent can remember when the average run of pitchers didn't get a fair shake in this business of getting hit by a pitched ball. There were batters who were very skillful in the art of getting hit and the pitcher stood out there quite helpless against these artists. Not until league officials ordered drastic enforcement one season, and they declared that the batter must make an honest effort to avoid getting hit by a pitched ball did the pitchers get a square deal.

They used to say that Kid Elberfeld was the champion at getting himself hit by a pitch and thus taking his base. The Kid, when he was playing with Washington a couple decades ago, was clever. He would extend an elbow in the path of the pitch, or make a phoney effort to duck and invariably would be waved to first base.

Bucky Harris had the knack, too, when he was playing with and managing Washington in the twenties. It's in the records that he was hit by a pitched ball 28 times during one season, and Bucky admits that a good share of that number was not accidental.

At one time opposing managers became so suspicious of Harris' seeming ability to get hit that they ordered him examined in the belief that he was wearing a pad strapped to his left side—the side that faced the pitchers. They never were able to turn up anything against Bucky, but they still had their suspicions.

When you know you're going to get hit it doesn't hurt, Bucky was saying today. The muscles are relaxed, you can ride with the blow, and unless you're never warned by on some money part of the anatomy no damage is done. It's when the blow is accidental that you're apt to get hurt, he was saying.

And there is apparently logic in that. You remember the story of Houdini. About the time he visited Yale University and permitted the entire boxing team to take socks at his stomach, daring them to hurt him. He simply stepped his muscles for the punches, took them and laughed 'em off.

Then, when the exhibition was at an end, and Houdini was apparently a Yale student dealt him a comparatively light backhand slap on the stomach, he doubled back in pain. That night they took the magician to a hospital for a serious operation necessitated by the blow which had been given him while he was unwarned.

Harris tells one story about getting hit, on himself. Because it happened so many years ago, he cheerfully admits now that he was liberated got himself hit by a pitched ball.

"We were playing a game in Washington against the Boston Red Sox. Red Ruffing was pitching for Boston and the score was tied in the ninth inning. I forget who was batting, but I told him I was in and filled the bases, I go up there and get that winning run across even if I had to get hit.

"Ruffing was a fast pitcher, and it was no fun getting hit by him, but I wanted to win that ball game. Besides, it was getting dark and I knew I'd never get a hit off that guy. He was too good.

"Well, we finally got three men on and I went up there to the plate. The first pitch he threw was a side. I was crowding the plate anyway. I made a great show of getting out of the way, doing a lot of wiggling, but as I felt I threw my left hand, and sure enough the pitch caught me on the fingers. The umpire waved me to first and the Sox squeaked, but he wouldn't change his decision and we won the ball game.

"But what struck me as funnier than that was the story Mrs. Harris told me. I was courting her then and she was quite a baseball fan. Senator Sutherland—that's her father, he's talking over there now with Governor Holt—asked her that night who won the game at Griffith Stadium. She told him Washington won.

"He wanted to know how we won and she said I got hit by a pitched ball in the last inning with the bases full and forced in the winning run. It looked to me as if Stanley got hit deliberately. Dad, she added, The Senator was horror-struck.

"Oh, I don't believe that," he said. "Stanley wouldn't be so unsportsmanlike as all that, I'm sure."

Tommy Farr Beats Neusel in London

London, June 15 (AP).—Tommy Farr, British Empire heavyweight boxing champion, knocked out Walter Neusel, of Germany, in the third round of the 12-round bout at Harringay Stadium tonight.

A crowd of 14,000 Britons, convinced that they now have a real contender for the world heavyweight crown for the first time in years, cheered wildly when the 23-year-old Welshman pounded Neusel's jaw until he sank to the floor and sat there while he was counted out. Farr had a slight edge in the first two rounds.

As a result of his triumph, it is expected Farr will be matched with Max Schmeling in Germany some time this summer.

Women's Amateur Favorites Triumph

Misses Dettweiler, Kincaid and Brown Join Medalist.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Old man upset was given the cold shoulder in the first round matches of the twenty-first annual of the D. C. women's golf championship at Chevy Chase yesterday. Medalist Mrs. Bishop Hill and Defending Champion Mrs. Betty Meckley leading the parade of favorites into the second round.

The quarterfinalists also turned in one-sided margins of victories, none of the matches reaching the seventeenth hole. Mrs. Meckley was taken to the sixteenth by Mrs. B. C. Hartig in the closest match of the championship flight.

The play of the host club medalist, Mrs. Bishop Hill, continued to feature the event as she played the first nine in 49 strokes yesterday, one under women's par, holding a 7-up lead at this point, and closed the match on the thirteenth hole, needing par in for a 78.

Mrs. Stokes Wins.
The first round victors in the first flight included Mrs. Walter R. Stokes, of Indian Spring; Miss Ellen Kincaid, of Congressional; Mrs. E. G. Gray, of Manor; Miss Marion Brown, of Manor; Miss Elizabeth Houghton, of Chevy Chase, and Miss Helen Dettweiler, Congressional.

Mrs. Stokes was 5 up at the turn and won by 6 and 4 over Mrs. C. Medley, Manor, who proved no match for the Indian Spring star. Mrs. H. W. Rowan, of Chevy Chase, was all even with Ellen Kincaid at the turn but the Congressional Miss stepped out on the second nine and won four of the first six holes to turn in a 4 and 3 triumph.

Mrs. E. G. Gray, Manor, who scored 83 in the qualifying round, was also extended for the first nine holes, holding a narrow one hole lead over Mrs. Gene Larkin but won the match through the twelfth holes for a 4 up lead and repeated on the fourteenth for a 5 and 4 margin of victory.

Brown 4 Up.
Marion Brown, 4 up at the end of nine holes, won 6 and 4 over Mrs. N. J. Flather, of the host club, while Miss Elizabeth Houghton played the back nine in 39 strokes after an outlying 49 to score even.

Mrs. Charlotte Stearns, 4 and 3.
Helen Dettweiler was two over regulation figures in a 6 and 5 triumph over Mrs. H. M. Brundage, of Congressional, holding a 4 up lead with a 42 on the first nine. Mrs. Meckley, defending her title, needed a pair of 4's for an 84 when she ended the match with Mrs. Hartig.

The second flight matches were marked by a majority of one-sided triumphs. Mrs. Douglas Tschefely, of Washington, overcoming a 3 up and 5 to 4 lead, won the match by 5 and 4 over Mrs. W. D. Masten, of the host club, in the only extra-hole match of the day. It was a fourth flight encounter.

Meckley-Stokes.
Today's matches promised fireworks in the championship flight. Mrs. Meckley facing the bid of Mrs. Stokes in the first match off the tee, followed by the Ellen Kincaid-Mrs. Pray struggle for a place in the semifinals.

Marion Brown will attempt the herculean task of stopping the host club favorite, Miss Elizabeth Houghton, the Maryland State runner-up, while the fine golf of Mrs. Hill will face a real test in Helen Dettweiler, the fourth choice.

The seventh flight, of four players, will play their first round matches tomorrow. Yesterday's results and pairings in the six flights follow: (Scores on Page 26.)

Three New Nats to Face Tigers Here Today

Mrs. Opal Hill Bows in Upset In Women's Western Open Golf

Chicago, June 15.—Mrs. Russell Mann, of Milwaukee, a title-winner a few years ago as Miss Lucile Robinson, of Des Moines, Iowa, built a fire under a big comeback campaign today by blasting the defending champion, Mrs. Opal Hill, of Kansas City, out of the women's Western Open golf championship tournament.

Mrs. Mann, whose last big achievement was a one-sided triumph over Virginia Van Wile in the final of the 1933 Western closed event, gave the tough Beverly Country Club course a beating for as long as it was necessary to stay out there in winning a 5-and-4 decision. Mrs. Hill, winner of the 1935 and 1936 tournaments, shot pretty fair golf, but it was not nearly good enough to stop red-hot playing that was three strokes better than par for the 14 holes.

The winner, and now the favorite to succeed Mrs. Hill as champion, fired off a birdie through a combination of straight shots to the green and putts that dropped for the first nine holes, and slipped over even figures only once on the way back, in finishing her upset triumph. She went out in 35 strokes, 4 better than par, while Mrs. Hill fell far behind in turning in a good 41.

Scarcely second to Mrs. Mann's brilliant upset, was another by Paula Parker, 19-year-old blonde beauty from Milwaukee, who moved into the second round by smothering the medalist, Mrs. Burt Well, of Cincinnati, also by 5 and 4. Neither shot brilliantly, Miss

Wes Ferrell Seeks 2d Victory as Nat

Wes Ferrell, who has a 1,000 pitching and a .500 batting mark since joining up with the Nats, will make his Griffith Stadium debut in a Washington uniform when he faces the Detroit Tigers from the pitching mound today.

Ferrell's first effort with the Nats was a four-hit performance in which he beat the White Sox last Saturday. He will be opposed by Roxy Lawson, the Tigers' leading pitcher.

The trading deadline fell at the stroke of midnight last night with the Nats unable to make any further deals. President Clark Griffith attempted all day to make a trade that would bring another veteran pitcher to the Nats, but all of his offers went unheeded. The only chance by which the Nats can now secure big league material is by waivers.

Flosilda Gets Potomac in Nose Finish

Palumbo Rides Filly to Close Win in Charles Town Race.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town Race Track, W. Va., June 15.—The combination of Flosilda, 4-year-old daughter of Wrack, and Sammy Palumbo, leading jockey in this neck of the woods, proved too formidable for four of the best middle distance horses on the grounds in this afternoon's Potomac Handicap. With Flosilda doing the running and Palumbo doing the urging, they came down to the wire to take a thrilling nose decision from W. A. Jones' Timber Lady. These lengths back came French Tramp to account for third money. The "also ran" department consisted of Sea Dove and Irene's Bob, the latter another of the many paddock tips that has crashed in the past two days.

Flosilda, winning her fourth race of the year in six starts, brought her backers a $7200 purse and ran the Charles Town course of slightly more than 1 1/4 miles in 2:11.3, three-fifths of a second off the track record.

A crowd of 4,000 witnessed the battle of the field of five. Timber Lady did the expected by setting the pace. She shook Irene's Bob at the far turn. Flosilda was third at the turn. Palumbo was third at the turn. However, as the field neared the turn, Palumbo went to work on the filly and she found her way between the leaders to emerge almost on even terms with Timber Lady. In the ensuing drive Flosilda slowly but surely wore down her rival.

Adriatic, one of the four who share the record for 4 1/4 furlongs, bounced over that route to defeat seven others in the opening race of the program. Ridden by Jock R. Root, the 3-year-old son of Oceanic forged to the front soon after the break and gave his backers no anxious moments. Timber Lady's Ruby and Wise Revue were second and third all the way. The winner paid $6.

Turn Up, a 3-year-old daughter of Floral King, ran her way out of the maiden ranks in the second race. She tossed Jockey R. Root at the post and cut up so thoroughly that she was ordered outside of the stall gate. However, when the racing began, she was all business and came from off the pace of Justa Canter to score with ease. Justa Canter lasted long enough to be second, ahead of Beau Bay. Turn Up paid $4.50.

Stepping In came from behind to win the third race under the guidance of Jockey Manny Berg. The gelding had the quietest ride of the race, but he was the best of the bunch. He was the best of the bunch. He was the best of the bunch.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ADRIATIC, $2.00; $3.00; $2.40; TULEYRIES RUBY, $3.00; $2.40; WISE REVUE, $2.40.
ADRIATIC sent to the front at once, drew away from opposition in stretch while kept to strong hand ride. TULEYRIES RUBY was closest to pace throughout, but could not seriously threaten. WISE REVUE had no excuse and went evenly. HOGAN showed a good effort. IN HIGH, unprepared for the start, closed some ground and then weakened.

SECOND RACE—Charles Town course. Purses, $400; claiming. For maiden 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 3:07. Off at 3:11. Winner, M. O'Brien's son, (3), by Floral King—Upturn. Trained by F. Waring. Value to winner, $300; second, $80; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:18.5.

Wheat Whirls 4 Cents Upward In Pit Turmoil

Threatened World Scarcity of Breadstuffs Alarms Traders.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 15.—Rushing excitement upward 4 and 5 cents a bushel, wheat markets both sides of the Atlantic indicated alarm today relative to prospective world breadstuffs scarcity.

In a crop-scare market, Winnipeg quotations led the way, skyrocketing 5 cents a bushel on all future deliveries both of wheat and rye, the furthest immediate allowable limit. Simultaneously, the Chicago wheat market soared 4 cents maximum for wheat, and 9 cents for rye.

Setting the wheat trade aflame were official reports today indicating that wheat and rye alike promise poor harvests in Europe, and that Saskatchewan Province, the largest wheat producer in Canada, is confronted by rapidly increasing danger of crop collapse in 7,000,000 acres because of widespread drought.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were 3 1/2 cents above yesterday's final, July 1.11 1/2; September, 1.10 1/2; December, 1.12 1/2; corn, 1/2 cent up; July, 1.14 1/2; September, 1.10 1/2; December, 1.12 1/2; oats, 1/2 cent up; July, 1.14 1/2; September, 1.10 1/2; December, 1.12 1/2; provisions varied from 10 cents setback to 30 cents higher.

Assail Heads

Executives Are Attacked

for Salaries and Stock Deals.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 15.—Stockholders of Paramount Pictures, Inc., held one of the most boisterous corporate meetings of the year today.

A few shareholders attacked salaries of executives and one, Irving Chestman, a dentist, and owner of 300 shares, accused Stanton Griffiths, a director and partner in the stock exchange firm of Hemphill, Noyes & Co., members of the New York Stock Exchange, of selling the common stock short. About 25 stockholders attended the meeting.

Griffiths, who had been sitting quietly next to Barney Balaban, president, rushed across the floor, pointed a finger at Chestman, and threatened to fight unless the charges were withdrawn.

Terminating Chestman's statements, Griffiths shouted: "You can't come here and say that to me—don't make statements you can't back up."

Griffiths said, "I have never sold a share of this stock short." He said he had conducted an arbitrage, buying the preferred and selling the common. "This was done for the benefit of the company without profit to me or my firm," he explained.

Griffiths then made a brief speech praising Balaban and there was applause from the floor.

Chestman rose again to speak but was cried down. When the meeting came to order he said: "I am not accusing anyone in particular. Mr. Balaban, I do not know there's something wrong somewhere which has depressed the stock."

The proceeds will be applied chiefly to the retirement in full of bank loans aggregating $10,000,000. The balance will be used to reimburse the company for 37½-cent cash dividends and for general corporate purposes.

The debentures are redeemable in whole or in part at any time from time to time or in part from time to time on any semi-annual interest date on 30 days' notice at prices ranging from 100 to 105 percent of the face value of the debentures decreasing prior to April 1, 1942, and to 100 percent of the face value of the debentures on and after April 1, 1942, after which they will be redeemed at 100 percent of the face value.

It is estimated that net farm income was $217 million higher last year than in 1929, due mainly to reduced interest, taxes and production costs. Farm spending power has increased. The trend towards farm mechanization has accelerated. The effect of these and other factors upon common stocks of farm machinery companies is discussed in a new survey, "Agricultural Machinery Industry." A copy will be sent upon request to accredited individuals.
